1(888) 414 - DOWN

Thanks to our retail and "online" customers we are one of the largest resources for goose down comforters, pillows and featherbeds. Consumers that compare our quality and prices to those of department stores, discounters, catalogs and other web sites find that we are indeed unbeatable - and we guarantee that! Know the facts of down before you buy.

FACT: Down comes from the chest of the bird to keep it insulated from the weather. Feathers (those things with quills) come from the back of the bird to keep it dry. Down can cost as much as $10.00 an ounce, feathers 10¢ an ounce. Over 90% of down manufacturers find it to their advantage to add over 30% feathers to their down. It's like buying three pounds of ground sirloin and getting two pounds of meat and one pound of fat. You have paid for meat and got fat, it's the same with their down, they both do it because it's legal. We do not contaminate our down by adding feathers to it.

KNOW THE FACTS BEFORE YOU BUY IT

FACT: Fill power, this is the amount the cubic inches filled by one ounce of down. Higher fill power means a higher quality down. You will find that as the quality of the down increases, so does the comfort & life of the item.

FACT: We use only high thread count, baffle box construction, 100% cotton covers on our down comforters & pillows. Down insulates by trapping air and holding in your body temperature, keeping you comfortable through the night. Low quality comforters are usually heavier because it takes more of an inferior down to fill a comforter. Inferior down becomes clumpy and it can't breath, resulting in your becoming over heated and uncomfortable. Our high quality down gives you the warmth and comfort without the weight.

FACT: In all likelihood you will have your comforter longer than the car you are now driving.

"We go the distance for you."

Explaining The New Southampton Ordinances To The Dogs And Birds

By Dan Rattiner

Some of you regular readers may have noticed an ad in last week's Dan's Papers inviting all the local dogs and birds in the community to a meeting in our conference room. The reason for this is that officials of Southampton Town are considering new laws involving dogs and birds, and before passing them, they wanted these proposals explained to the dogs and birds. The Southampton Environmentalist was out of town. I was next in line.

The meeting was held last Monday at 5 p.m. The place was packed.

"First, let me talk to you dogs," I said. "At the present time, you are not allowed on any of the beaches in the town at any time, except for Ponquogue Beach in Hampton Bays, Tiana Beach and Red Creek Park."

"I've never liked the law," a basset said. "Those beaches are really far from Bridgehampton."

"Well, I like it," a cocker spaniel said.

"That's because you're from Hampton Bays. Those beaches are right there. I just gave up on going to the beach altogether," the basset said.

"Well, it's good news," I said. "They are proposing to change that. You will be able to go to ANY town beach from Bridgehampton to Eastport, at any time during the fall, winter and spring. And between May 1 and September 30, you can go between 6 p.m. and 9 a.m."

"How the hell am I going to keep THAT straight," said a boxer. "I can't read a calendar."

"None of us can read a calendar," a sheepdog said.

"Can I still go to Tiana and Ponquogue and Red Creek Park Beaches like I can now?" the basset asked.

"Those three are losing their special privilege."

"Well, that doesn't seem like such good news to me," the basset said.

"I don't like going out after dark," a poodle said. "It scares me."

"I'll go with you," a Great Dane offered.

"All you think about is yourself," the cocker spaniel shouted to the basset. "This is GOOD news for the rest of us."

"Well, there is bad news," I said.

Everyone went quiet.

"They are increasing the fines for being on the beach at the wrong times. It could be as high as $250. And they are adding places on the beach you can't go on any time."

"Like where?" the Great Dane asked.

"Like on a dune or where the piping plover nests are."

"How do we get to the beach if we can't run

INVESTIGATING JANET JACKSON AND IRAQ

By Dan Rattiner

As I'm sure you know by now, at halftime on Superbowl Sunday, Justin Timberlake pulled the top of a dress off Janet Jackson's right breast, thus exposing it for a fleeting moment to 120 million people. MTV is horrified, the NFL is horrified, CBS is horrified and the SEC is horrified. Very many organizations spelled out by three capital letters are horrified. All are calling for an investigation, the essence of which seems to be "what did she (Jackson) know and when did she know it?"

Investigators are expected to examine the dress, the Velcro or hooks, the e-mail and phone

"Directly from the parking lot, I guess," I said.

"That's dangerous, with all the cars."

"There's good sniffing stuff in the dunes," a black Lab said.

Everyone went quiet again.

"The fines that will be charged if you don't clean up after yourself are being increased. They used to be $25. Now they will be from $50 to $250 depending on the extent of the violation."

"What the hell does THAT mean?" the Great Dane asked.

"I'm not sure. But if you do anything on the beach, just clean it up."

"None of the other animals on the beach have to clean up," the poodle frowned.

"They're going to have those little mutt mitt dispensers at the back of every beach."

There was silence again. Then the black Lab spoke.

"I've seen 'em. They have them in East Hampton. But they are on a pole much too high. You can't get at them."

"Just don't poop on the beach, then," I said.

Silence again.

"Well, that's about it for the dogs," I said.

"Okay. Can we go?" the black Lab asked.

"Yes, you can go."

"There's a cat out there," he said. And suddenly, all the dogs were barking and knocking over chairs, and making a big ruckus as they headed for the door. When they were gone, I continued.

"Okay, now you birds," I said. "This isn't a proposed law. It's an actual NEW law. And it comes from the Department of Environmental Conservation. Beginning on January 23, the DEC is designating certain areas as bird conservation areas."

"The date's past. The date's past," a parrot cackled.

"Those areas are the Shinnecock State Tidal Wetlands on the east side of the Shinnecock Inlet, the Quantuck Bay area in Quogue, the Moniebogue Bay area in Westhampton Beach and Tuthill Cove and Havens Point, both in East Moriches."

"This is outrageous," said an owl. "How are they going to enforce this? Are they going to have a line going straight up at the borders of these places, and we're not allowed to fly beyond these borders?"

"That's not it at all," I said.

"This calls for a demonstration," a seagull said. "A protest at Town Hall."

"No, no, no," I said. "All it means is that as long as you are within the borders of those conservation areas, you won't get shot at."

There was a silence for awhile. It was taking a bit for this to sink in.

"So, in one area we get shot at, and another area we don't get shot at," a cardinal said.

"That's it."

"Any fines?"

"Isn't getting shot at enough?" the seagull asked the cardinal.

"I guess."

"I think there is a much bigger issue here," another seagull said. "But now I can't remember what it is."

"But we piping plovers, we'll still be safe," a piping plover said.

"That's right. You are an endangered species. You can go anywhere."

"I wish I was endangered," a tern said sourly.

"And you can nest anywhere," I continued to the piping plover. "On any beach. And when you do, we humans will put a fence around you, telling everybody to keep away."

"Including red foxes?"

"Just humans. Sorry."

"Foxes can't read, stupid," the tern said.

"Okay, okay," I said. "Everybody can go now. That's it."

There was some fluttering.

"Just one more question?" the piping plover asked.

"No more questions," I said. "Meeting's over."

"I move that this meeting be adjourned," the seagull said.

Everybody fluttered and cackled in approval. And they all flew away. Except for a chicken.

"What about me?"

"Enough!" I shouted. "Out! Everybody out!" And I shoed the chicken out the front door onto the lawn. I'd had it. "Get off the lawn or I'll call Colonel Sanders!" I shouted.

Ideas For Dan's Papers They Made The Movie Here Film Festival

By Dan Rattiner

As you probably know, Southampton College presents the Dan's Papers They Made the Movie Here Film Festival twice a year. It is held in the Duke Lecture hall on the campus of the college on Saturday afternoons in April, and then again in November. At that time, we present, free of charge, full length feature films that have been made here. Among them are Rocket Gibraltar starring Burt Lancaster, Masquerade starring Rob Lowe, and the very first film made here, Rudolph Valentino's Blood and Sand, made in Montauk. We are presently looking for a Mary Pickford movie made in Bridgehampton. The new Jack Nicholson and Diane Keaton film, Something's Gotta Give, was made almost entirely here.

Anyway, the other day I was reading about the Hawaiian island of Kauai and all the movies made there, and I came upon an advertisement for something called the "Kauai Movie Tour" where you drive around in a motor coach and watch film clips of all their movies, while you actually see the locations right out of the motor coach window. They've identified almost sixty films made in Kauai — almost triple the number we have located for the East End. So I thought it might be a good learning experience to take this tour. Perhaps I could learn something I could apply to our Dan's Papers They Made the Movie Here Film Festival.

I called them up, got directions, and went. I flew to San Francisco on United, then took Hawaiian to Honolulu, then a shorter flight to Kauai where I rented a car from Budget and drove to the Princeville Hotel to freshen up. The following morning, I showed up at 8:45 for this five hour tour, at a small building filled with movie posters. There was a counter where you bought tickets and CDs and so forth located behind the Jungle Girl clothing store in Kapaa, Kauai. I bought a ticket.

The tour has a driver, a guide with a microphone and an overhead TV screen where the film clips are shown. The guide, named Steve, originally from Lowell, Massachusetts, has the TV controls and can pause, use slow motion and so forth and so on and is sort of the ringmaster of this experience. Nine people were on the motorcoach, including one couple from New Jersey.

Our first stop was the Coco Palms Hotel, the site of several of the Elvis Presley movies made in Hawaii. At this hotel, he sings his famous "Hawaiian Wedding Song" as he takes for his bride the beautiful Joan Blackman, on the banks of a large outdoor pond. After he and she sing their "I do's," he steps aboard a Hawaiian canoe and is paddled slowly along as natives along the shore sway to the music while holding torches aloft to light their way.

First we walked around the Coco Palms Hotel property — which is now abandoned — and saw the cottage where Presley stayed, and the big pond where the canoe got paddled.

"Coco Palms never reopened after the Nili Hurricane in 1991 that tore off most of its roof. They've spent eleven years in litigation with the insurance people. And the place is pretty much in ruins, as you see."

We walked through the wrecked cocktail lounge by the swimming pool. It was open to the air and rotting. A dozen coconuts floated in the swimming pool. A dead palm tree lay across it.

"But now they've made a settlement and there are rumors the place has been sold. It will be restored to its former glory, probably at a cost of about $60 million."

All the stars from the fifties and sixties stayed at the Coco Palms when it was open. Steve told a story about how Frank Sinatra was rescued by lifeguards after almost drowning in the ocean. He was making a film here and after, he gave away most of the sets and costumes, almost all of which he autographed. He donated a huge sum to the lifesaving service in Kauai and updated all their equipment.

Then we sat in the motor coach and watched more scenes from Elvis Presley movies.

"Gilligan's Island" was made in Kauai. We visited the beach where the cabin cruiser was wrecked. The Jurassic Park films were made in Kauai. Open fields among the jagged peaks of the North Shore — the place with the greatest rainfall on the planet — hosted the opening scene where the helicopter landed in each of the first two movies. Six Days and Seven Nights starring Anne Heche and Harrison Ford, was made almost entirely in Kauai. We visited a grass field where a small airport building was constructed, and where the planes took off and landed. The "airport" building is still there, but no planes take off from there now.

Many war movies, particularly Second World War movies, were made in Kauai. We saw film clips starring John Wayne, Charlton Heston, and James Garner. We walked out onto the pier at Hanalea and saw scenes from South Pacific, which was probably the most famous movie shot here, starring Mitzie Gaynor and Frank Sinatra and so many others. From the motor coach, we saw other scenes, starring Roger Moore and James Caan. We had lunch, provided by the tour, at a beach.

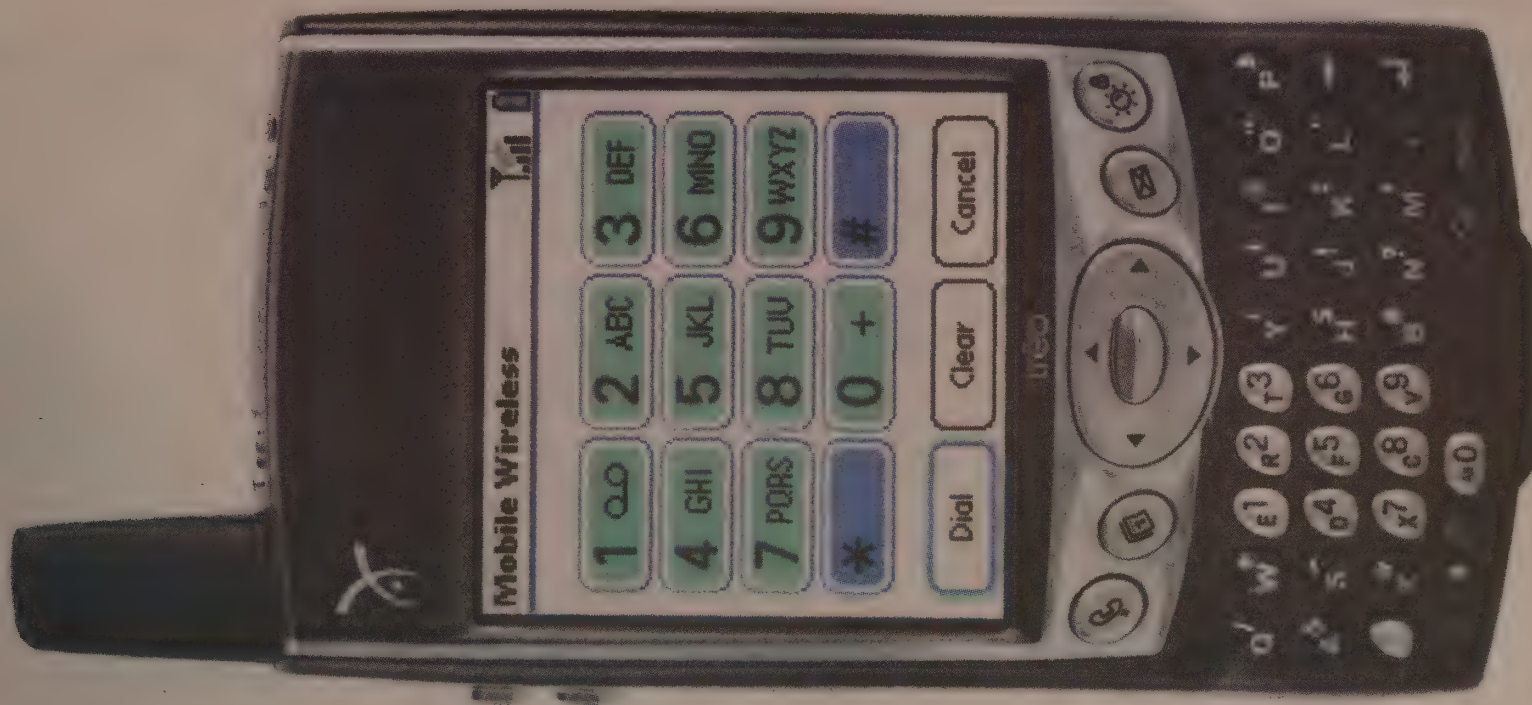

All in all, I learned a lot by watching how other communities show off their "Movies Made Here." We'd drive down a street and Steve would show us a clip on the screen of a monster walking toward a mansion. And then, there on our right, would be this mansion. It was all pretty neat.

I don't know just yet how I am going to let my experience in Kauai affect the Dan's Papers They Made the Movie Here Film Festival. It'll be a surprise.

I figure that its like when a member of Congress goes on a taxpayer financed junket to one of the trouble spots in the world, like Acapulco or Rio de Janeiro or the Riviera, and he learns stuff, but then he doesn't tell anybody how it will help things back home. Then, he comes home and just surprises everybody with his new ideas and they think he thought all this up himself.

I am working out my tax deductions for this junket right now, as a matter of fact. •

Obsession

Proof Of The Adage That Absence Makes The Heart Grow Fonder

By Dan Rattiner

This is a story of love denied, of passion thwarted, of hope, yearning, obsession and, ultimately, bitter disappointment. It's the stuff they make movies from. It's about a cell phone.

On December 9, last year, this writer ordered a Treo cellphone from AT&T. I ordered the Treo because PC Magazine rated it the best of the best. And I ordered it from AT&T Wireless because that company was one of two phone companies (along with Sprint) that provided the service for it. I have been a customer of AT&T Wireless for years, ever since they had phones the size of shoeboxes.

Nothing could go wrong. What could go wrong?

The lady I spoke with at AT&T took my credit card number, told me I had made an excellent choice, and that the phone would arrive in three days. After five days with nothing from Fed Ex, I called back and they order the car charger but send me the cell phone. A mistake had been made, but they would fix it. The phone should be here overnight.

So she had one, and the president had one and everybody else had one and nobody was giving theirs up.

told me they were very sorry, but there had been a delay because I had ordered an accessory for the phone, a car charger, and it was out of stock. They were supposed to just back beautiful thing. Jet black. 4.6 ounces. I saw that through Sprint, I could get one that was silver. But I thought black looked much cool-

Three days later, still with no Treo, I called again. This time, they were even more apologetic. I had been a customer for all those years. Somebody had entered the order number wrong. They would offer me $150 off because of my trouble. And the phone would arrive, at the latest, in another two days. That night, I went online to look once again at this phone I had ordered. It was truly a

MANORVILLE ELECTRICIAN ARRESTED IN MAUI

By Dan Rattiner

Daniel Pelosi of Manorville is the chief suspect in the murder of millionaire Ted Ammon of New York and East Hampton. Ammon was bludgeoned to death in his Middle Lane home two years ago, and though Pelosi has never been charged with the crime, he is currently the subject of a grand jury investigation that could lead to that charge.

What he has been convicted of is multiple cases of drunk driving. In his most recent conviction, police say that after they pulled him over, but before they could walk to his car, he leaped from the front seat to the back seat and lay down pretending to be asleep. He claimed it wasn't he who had been driving, but that it was somebody else who ran off. The judge did not buy that defense.

Now a similar sort of defense has come up in a new incident involving Pelosi. On January 16, in Maui, Hawaii where Pelosi was vacationing, he and two friends boarded a small cruise ship for a day's sail offshore of that island. The fare was $80 a head.

Sometime during the cruise, according to Pelosi, he took his shirt off, prompting a crew member, Larry Gronau, to instruct him to put it back on. Pelosi told police later that the crew member said "Hey, movie star, put your shirt on, this isn't prime time," apparently referring to his notoriety concerning the murder investigation.

The crew member's version is a bit different. He told police that he decided to refuse to serve any more alcohol to Pelosi's date beer. It has an adorable little keyboard. I was in love.

The Treo could replace three items that I carry around all the time. I'd no longer need my Palm Pilot for phone numbers, my cell phone for phone calls or a laptop computer for my e-mail. The Treo phone could do it all. And of course, unlike the Palm or laptop, if I set it down somewhere I could phone it and it would ring and I could quickly find it. My obedient, beautiful, just call me if you lose me Treo.

I also went onto the e-Bay website that night. Don't tell anybody I did this. I pulled down the shades. For an extra hundred dollars above retail, I could get somebody's used Treo. Or a new Treo "in its original box." Right. Probably fell off the back of a truck, the registration number recorded, the FBI ready to pounce.

When the Treo did not arrive at the appointed time, I called again. And this time, they said they could not find my order. Furthermore, they said the phone was now in short supply, and they were not even giving dates when they might be available.

At this point, seething with anger, I wrote a letter to the president of AT&T Wireless at the Seattle headquarters. It was two pages, single spaced and it fully described this nightmare. I couldn't sleep. I couldn't eat. Where was my Treo? I'd had enough.

The next morning, I ran into somebody who had a Treo, in a leather case attached to a belt loop on his pants.

"How do you like it?" I asked.

"Fantastic," he said. "She's even better than I expected."

A woman from the president's office called me the next day. Her name is Christine Wright. She had my letter in hand and she had a suggestion.

"Call the people who make the Treo and order it from them. I have no explanation why we gave you bad service, and I can only offer my apologies."

"How about sending one you might have lying around out there in Seattle? Surely you have one."

"I couldn't do that," she said.

So she had one, and the president had one and everybody else had one and nobody was giving theirs up. I couldn't blame them.

I called Handspring, the company that makes the Treo.

"Order it online," an agent said. "You'll get it a little faster. We have a long line of people who want Treos and we ship first come first serve. The website will tell you when you can expect your Treo, based on when your order comes in."

That was all she could do.

Online, I filled out the form and gave them my credit card number. There was one question which asked if I was a new customer or an existing customer. I checked new customer. I was new to Handspring. I placed the order on December 24, the day before Christmas, and maybe, because it was so close to Christmas, ordered an extra charger, an extra car charger, a leather case and an extra earpiece. An online chart said all this would arrive on January 19, or a few days thereafter.

"What say we go to Hawaii for a couple of weeks?" I proposed to my significant other. She thought it was a great idea. We went.

From Hawaii, I kept calling home to see if the Treo had arrived. It hadn't. Hmmm.

We arrived back from Hawaii on January 20 and one of my first phone calls was to Handspring to ask them what was going on with my order. You can look online and see cause she was inebriated. Pelosi took offense. When told of Pelosi's account of the incident, he said that didn't even make sense because lots of people take off their shirts on a boast cruise and no one has any objection to that.

In any case, soon thereafter, according to Gronau, Pelosi threw a punch at him that hit him right in the face, knocking him down.

Upon returning to shore, Gronau went to get medical help for what turned out to be a broken nose, then went to the police station whereupon assault charges were filed against Pelosi. On January 18, two days later, Maui police arrested Pelosi at the motel where he was staying to charge him with that crime.

The next day, at the arraignment, Pelosi told the judge they had the wrong man. He told the story about the shirt again and said he had only taken it off because his friend's date had gotten cold. When the crew member had told him to put his shirt back on, even though he told it to him in that hurtful way, he immediately did so. And then, while disembarking the ship after it docked, he heard, behind him, a smack, and turned to find that somebody had flattened the crew member. He thought nothing further about it.

Pelosi flew back to the mainland after his arraignment, met with his lawyer Gerald Shargel, and then returned to Maui this past Monday for a court date where he was formally charged with the second degree assault, a felony, and then released on $3000 bail. He returns to court on February 25th. At that time, if the court determines probable cause, the prosecution will be in a position to decide whether or not to take it to the grand jury. If convicted, he could serve up to five years in prison. In Maui.

Was It Really Just A Software Problem That Caused The Mars Rover To Break Down?

By Dan Rattiner

Over the last few days, scientists have fixed the Mars rover that broke down by the side of the road two weeks ago. As you are reading this, it is underway again, sniffing around, doing what it did before.

This is an amazing achievement, when you think about it. Here on earth, the best we have been able to do when cars break down is OnStar, the General Motors support system which basically allows you to speak to a microphone over your rearview mirror from which a knowledgeable person in Detroit can hear about your problem, make suggestions, keep you calm and call for a mechanic to come and fix you up.

On Mars, we have nobody on board for an OnStar person to talk to, and we have no mechanic that will come help you. How did they fix it?

According to a series of press conferences held by NASA, the rover worked flawlessly until Wednesday, January 21. Streams of data flowed out from Earth ordering it to do this and that, which it did. Streams of data came back from the Rover, indicating when various tasks were completed, interpreting soil samples, and sending photographs. On Wednesday, the rover was ordered to roll slowly forward, which it did, and to begin to scan a large rock that the scientists have named Adirondack. A mirror was ordered to pivot. Rover failed to move any mirror. In fact, rover shut down.

If something happens to make the rover shut down, there is an automatic restart, sort of like turning over the engine in your car. And so it restarted, got to a certain point in the restart process, began to send messages of its progress, and then shut down again. And then, once again, it restarted.

The restarts, by the way, are not instantaneous as they might be with your car. Each one includes pre-start re-checks, and the process takes twenty minutes. It got through these, then sent messages for about twenty seconds, and then shut down again.

As time went by and the shut downs and restarts continued, there was a fear that rover would wear out its batteries. Normally, rover powers down and sleeps during the night, and recharges in the morning when the sun hits the solar panels. Though the solar panels continued to power it back up, estimates were that if it wasn't fixed, the battery would be finished in 60 days. Then that would be that.

WHAT IF YOU FOUND AN INDIAN BURIAL SITE?

By Anthony Vela

When Walter and Susanne Richards made the decision to have a horse barn built on their Osprey Road property in Shelter Island, they could have never imagined what was going to be unearthed. During the excavation in October of last year, human bones were found buried three feet under the ground. Mr. Richards called the police, and after the Suffolk County medical examiner's office, with the help of an anthropologist, determined that the bones were the remains of at least 10 Native Americans, Mr. Richards met with Shinnecock tribal members, and some sort of an agreement was reached to preserve the site.

However, when the Shinnecocks visited the site sometime after Mr. Richards made the agreement, construction had begun on half of the barn. Unhappy about the construction, the Shinnecocks met with the Shelter Island Town Board on January 23 expressing their concern over the lack of concern to preserve Native American archaeological discoveries.

The Shinnecocks hope to introduce a town ordinance that their attorney, George Stankevich, is working on — the proposed ordinance will outline how to protect future Native American gravesites.

And so, during the next week, the scientists were beaming up from the earth all sorts of messages, which ranged from "stop shutting down," to "reply if you can hear this." A small backup antenna acknowledged that these messages were getting through, but the big antenna remained silent. What was wrong?

On Friday morning, the scientists tried once again to hail the rover. Message received, but no other reply. Then, as they were preparing to send a second message, they received, very slowly, at 10 bits per second instead of the usual 120 bits per second, a drawn out, garbled message from the big antenna on rover. The rover was alive!

A further garbled message came through in the afternoon, this time directed not at earth, but at the Mars Odyssey, which had gotten the rover to Mars. Earth overheard it.

At a press conference the next day, mission director Peter Theisinger said "We're starting to get some of the perimeter pieces. But we've got a long way to go here, with the patient in intensive care. But we think we can figure this out."

The scientists worked round the clock for the next seven days. And on Saturday January 31, they announced that the rover was fixed. The problem, they said, was that the rover's hard drive was not large enough to save all the files of its activities that it generated. And when a file could not be saved, it ordered a shut down. Earth could not send rover a new and bigger hard drive chip, of course, and so they went with plan B, which says if you can't raise the bridge, lower the water. They identified 1,700 files on the hard drive they wouldn't need any more and they issued a command to the rover to delete them. This the rover was able to do. Now, with the space on its computer freed up, Rover could save files, start up and stay up. It could go about its business. And if too many files got saved, they'd delete some of them again.

They were also going to keep an eye on the hard drive levels of the rover Opportunity, which had now landed on the other side of Mars. Don't want the same problem there.

All of this sounds very logical and very wonderful, but readers are urged to take all this with a grain of salt. We all know that, at times, the government doesn't tell us everything that is going on. This may be one of those times.

Here is the alternate explanation of what happened on Mars.

The Martians, who are living underground in the underground streams we are now close to discovering, put a gag in rover's mouth and held it hostage. Observing that it had been communicating with Earth, the Martians deduced that is where rover came from, and so tried forcing rover to send a message demanding ransom. Earth seemed to give them the cold shoulder, and so they tried ordering it to send the ransom message up to the Odyssey circling overhead. Sometimes, they'd take the gag out and allow rover to say a few words to earth, just a few, just to let them know she was still alive. Then, finally, with nobody replying, they let rover go. And that's where we are now.

Thus we learn that Mars is ruled by alien kidnapper thugs developed enough to have Weapons of Mass Destruction. You know what we do with those who develop weapons of mass destruction.

Stay tuned. Democracy and one man, one vote are coming to a planet near you. •

Shelter Island Town Supervisor Arthur Williams has agreed to consider the Shinnecocks' ordinance and has asked the town attorney to review the situation at the barn burial site. According to town officials, a meeting is in the works with the "Intertribal Historic Preservation Task Force."

Although it looks like the two parties will work out their differences, the bigger question is why a gravesite ordinance does not already exist. With no laws on the books, just think what someone can do to a neighbor they had a falling-out with by telling the authorities that they have an artifact on their property — all hell could break loose. According to Shelter Island Town Historian, Louise Green, another mass grave of remains of Native Americans was found in the 1920s, and in the mid 1990s an ordinance to protect gravesites was pondered but never came to fruition.

Laws that govern archaeological finds vary country to country. In Greece, all archaeological finds must be reported even if they are accidentally found, and failure to do so can result in fines and penalties. Permits are also required for all excavations of archaeological sites and there are fines and imprisonment for any illegal excavations and exports. Greece authorizes excavation permits every year but the state can conduct excavations on national, municipal, religious, and private property; however, they have to pay fair costs to owners.

The United States, England, and Canada handle excavations quite differently, limit the amount of preservations, and favor the private entrepreneurial approach. The rights of the private property owner are paramount. This approach can lead to looting, and if people have to go through what the Richards are going through, they may not come forward. This, of course, would be a travesty, not only to the historical importance of Native American archaeological discoveries, but to the respect for the deceased.

When our loved ones die, we have a funeral service and burial, knowing that there will always be a place for family and friends to visit. Just because there are no specific laws governing Native American burial sites in Shelter Island does not mean that any less care should be given. Moreover, with a good law in place, there will be no question as what to do if someone should find a Native American burial site. •

To Be Or Not Be A Resident

Dunehampton And Sagaponack Make Court Consider: What Makes A Resident?

By Jerry Cimisi

Sometimes, one thing leads to another and that leads to a third that doesn't seem to have anything to do with the first. The issue of Dunehampton is a case in point: a number of beachfront property owners, from Water Mill to the East Hampton town line, are trying to form their own separate village, Dunehampton. This was spurred, they said, by Southampton Town's disregard for their properties (in most cases upon which quite expensive homes resided) being affected by beach erosion. But in turn, efforts to create Dunehampton have caused the hamlet of Sagaponack, which overlaps Dunehampton, to seek incorporation as a village and in addition, may result in a new legal precedent as to how a resident of a place is defined.

First, Dunehampton: One of its proponents, Dan Breen of Water Mill, says, "The town took a politically expedient view as to the problem of erosion, instead of really dealing with the problem. First they told us we couldn't rebuild if our houses were destroyed by a storm or erosion. When that didn't fly, they said we could move our houses back farther from the beach, but they increased the setback requirement from 100 feet to 125 feet. In other words, the house could not be any closer than 125 feet from the property line. That requirement would make it impossible for many of us to move our houses back. Also, a number of affected homes have wetlands behind them and there are requirements about being too close to that."

Certainly beachfront owners on the south shore of the East End have been under attack by Mother Nature during the last few years — especially this winter, with very severe, bitter, stormy weather.

Last October, Southampton Town Supervisor Patrick Heaney ruled that the petition to create Dunehampton did not show enough qualified residents to make up a village under New York

State law. Specifically, he took issue with how would-be Dunehamptonites arrived at the qualifications for a resident. (More on that shortly.) Dunehampton adherents have filed an appeal with the New York State Supreme Court, which should be ruled on by the end of February.

But right on the heels, so to speak, of Dunehampton's attempt at incorporation, came Sagaponack's bid for the same status. Southampton Town for the moment has put off any public hearing — much less a decision — on that, by saying that as a portion of Sagaponack would be in the proposed village of Dunehampton, Southampton would wait for the ruling on Dunehampton, to make any ruling on Sagaponack.

That is dubious reasoning, says a Sagaponack resident, an attorney himself, who did not wish to be named in this article. "I'm very active in this situation, but if my name were in every article, I'd be getting so many phone calls I wouldn't be able to get anything done."

He said, "Sagaponack's filing for incorporation is a direct result of Dunehampton. We have had concerns that we don't think the town has these communities. We see the incorporation of Sagaponack as a sure way to stop Dunehampton."

The resident agreed that the original legislation the town proposed, forbidding beachfront owners to rebuild, was unfair. "I absolutely agreed with the beachfront owners' point of view. They went to the town and they complained and the political process worked. The town backed off.

"But the whole concept of Dunehampton," he went on. "Seems to be an elitist thing. I know I'd be embarrassed to tell people I lived in 'Dunehampton.' I live one lot back from the beach. It shouldn't be the case that those of us who don't have beachfront property have to support those who do. The way I look at it is, the people who bought or built on the beach knew — or should have known — that the beachfront moves, gets bigger and smaller. In the old days, hardly anyone ever built on the beach, and if they did, it was these small shacks — you still see them along the beach in Sagaponack — that, if they were destroyed by a storm, the owner could easily rebuild them, or, at worst, would not have lost so much. Now you've got $8 million homes there. So it's a different story."

He added, "Even if the Dunehampton proponents are well-meaning about what they propose, who is to say — if Dunehampton goes through — what the next group of people who control it will want when they come in? They say they are not going to control zoning, but they will have the power to do so.

"When I first heard about the proposal for Dunehampton, I said: 'How much is this going to cost?' A village is going to mean having a building to have records, having a mayor and police force. What I have found is that almost all hamlets that become villages face raising more money than they thought they would have dealt with adequately, such as Ira Rennert's house, but this definitely would not have happened without Dunehampton. A lot of us — and not just in Sagaponack — think it's wrong to break up the 350 year old hamlets of Water Mill, Bridgehampton and Sagaponack to satisfy the needs of some beachfront property owners. Dunehampton would take a slice out of each of People who have homes in two or more places are often conflicted about which is the more important. Based on the fact that he named his two magnificent Chocolate Labs after the LA Lakers stars "Shaq" and "Kobe," Gary Bowen of Amagansett and Malibu obviously opts for the West Coast where he has enjoyed an enviable career directing daytime TV dramas or "soaps" as they are commonly called.

Gary's directing credits include "One Life to Live," the message inherent in whose title he has taken to heart in the manner he has chosen to live his life. From November to April, he is able to enjoy breathtaking sunsets over the Pacific from the balcony of his glamorous Malibu beach house, while from May to October he begins his days as the sun rises over the Atlantic at his rustic cottage on the Amagansett dunes.

Like many Californians, Gary Bowen, 60, hails from the East. He was born in Ventnor, New Jersey, attended local schools there and graduated from Brown University in 1962 with a degree in psychology. At 6 ft. 5 inches tall, it's not surprising that he played varsity basketball for Brown. He was also an outstanding tennis player and became intimately involved with theater. Upon graduation he was hired as a full-time drama and speech teacher at The Peddie School in Hightstown, N.J., where he developed a debating team as well as an ambitious theater program.

During his summer vacations in '64 and '65, Gary studied dance in Colorado and also became a member of the famed San Francisco Mime Troupe. That was the time of the Vietnam war, and San Francisco had more than its share of anti-war demonstrations. Gary recalls, with not a little nostalgia, participating in street theater and "agitprop" demonstrations, staging mock battles and slaughters. "We were arrested periodically, and the whole troupe would spend the night in jail," he said, "but we were always bailed out early the following morning."

After two years as a prep school teacher, he changed careers and went to work in television in New York City, where his first job was as a Production Assistant on Captain Kangaroo. He quickly moved up through the ranks at CBS, becoming an Assistant Director for a wide variety of programs and news specials, including the Macy's Thanksgiving Day Parade and Neil Armstrong's unforgettable walk on the moon. Among other shows with which he was associated were "Sesame Street" and "The Electric Company." While he worked in New York, CBS sent him to the NYU Film countries around the world and is still on the air today. "It's a huge hit in Russia," says Gary, "where it's been shown, with sub-titles in Russian, for nine years."

As a result of the success of "Santa Barbara," Gary Bowen began a new chapter in his career last summer: as a consultant to a new venture produced jointly by Sony Pictures Television International in partnership with Amedia Group, a Russian production company. Gary is working with these organizations to help them in all aspects of the production of a new daytime series, "Poor Anastasia," an ambitious historical drama set in 19th century Russia. There will be a total of 120 episodes and it will be shown in eight countries. According to The Hollywood Reporter, "this marks the first time that Russian and American production professionals have worked together."

Last year, Gary spent some six weeks in Russia working on location in St. Petersburg and in the company's studios in Moscow, where his wife, Ruth Previn, joined him. "It was a wonderful experience, and we had a great time" he said. Language proved no problem, he explained, due to the simultaneous translation provided by the incredible interpreter who worked with him. He expects to return there again later this year.

Now that he is no longer directing a regular series, Gary Bowen devotes his not inconsiderable energy and talent to his #1 passion:

tennis. His calendar is full of tournament commitments, virtually the year 'round. Nearly every weekend from January through March he competes in USTA tournaments in Palm Springs as well as in other tournaments throughout Southern California, including Whittier Narrows, Ojai, Indian Wells and Santa Monica. When he's not out of town, you can find him at the Malibu Racquet Club, a five minute drive from his home, where he also works out daily with his trainer.

During his summers in the Hamptons, Gary was a perennial champion at The Dunes Racquet Club, which last year merged with Sportime in Amagansett. There he continues to be one of the top tournament players, competing in singles, doubles and mixed doubles. In the fall, he competes in the ITF Senior Championships, usually held in one of the clubs of the Philadelphia Mainline. And, when Gary travels for pleasure, it's likely to be to Paris for the French Open or to London to be courtside at Wimbledon.

As he reflects on his life in retirement, Gary Bowen is satisfied with his lot, as well he might be. "Right now," he said, "I'm focused on the dogs and on traveling. I'm just lucky, that's all."

The Sheltered Islander By Sally Flynn

Observations of an Islander #284 Any groundhog in a storm...

Groundhog's Day is February 2. On this day, "Punxsutawney Phil," the nation's official groundhog meteorologist, pokes his head out of his den and if he sees his shadow, there's only six more weeks of winter. The word Punxatawny is Iroquois for "meat loaf." In the early days, no groundhog ever saw his shadow, because if he poked his head out of his den, he was dinner.

But what happens if this chubby rodent doesn't see his shadow? Does it mean we have more than six weeks of winter or less than six weeks of winter left? This year's Farmer's Almanac has made a big deal that this will be one of the longest and hardest winters on record, according to their ancient secret formula. I dug a little deeper into the 2004 Farmer's Almanac, the Shelter Island Edition and found a whole list of indicators of how to know that winter will last at least another eight weeks. This is very valuable information and helps to reduce our dependency on rodent shadow casting as a technical weather predictor.

There will be eight more weeks of winter if you will need new snow tires in four weeks.

There will be eight more weeks of winter if your current snow shovel has already developed a stress fracture.

There will be eight more weeks of winter if you have enough money to pay for fuel for six weeks without resorting to selling a child — even if it's one of yours...

There will be eight more weeks of winter if the ice chunks near the ferry docks are almost the size of Buicks.

There will be eight more weeks of winter if you have enough static electricity in your hair to run your toaster by putting the plug in your mouth.

There will be eight more weeks of winter if you have already purchased non-refundable tickets for a Winter Wonderland Getaway vacation in Colorado.

There will be eight more weeks of winter if you notice that the same group of ducks have not moved an inch in the pond near you the last three times you have driven by, and you now realize they are frozen in place.

There will be eight more weeks of winter if you have now spent the equivalent of the gross national product of Nigeria on Advil for post-shoveling backaches.

There will be eight more weeks of winter if you have "winter hair" so bad that no hairdo you can invent isn't improved 100% by wearing a hat.

There will be eight more weeks of winter if you have stockpiled so much salt that Mormons are hunting you for the return of their lake.

There will be eight more weeks of winter if you are thinking of hoarding Chapstick.

There will be eight more weeks of winter if you are starting to compare which hot chocolate mix gives you the most mini marshmallows.

There will be eight more weeks of winter if you didn't dry clean or thoroughly air out your down featherbed and/or comforter, and you just saw the TV show about dust mites, and now you are worried about what dust mite civilizations are being supported by your dead skin cells.

There will be eight more weeks of winter if you only have enough chopped wood to last for seven weeks. This virtually guarantees that the worst storm with the longest power outage will hit in the eighth week.

There will be eight more weeks of winter if you only got one new sweater for Christmas and it's ugly and doesn't fit but you must wear it every time you go to the IGA in case the person who gave it to you sees you there, and if you're not wearing the sweater they gave you, they will ask why.

There will be eight more weeks of winter if you have listed the NFB lobby as a place to warm-up on the way to your next place to warm-up.

There will be eight more weeks of winter if by the end of February, you look at the ice swirls on your windshield and start to hate the ice skating fairies from Disney's Fantasia that put them there...

There will be eight more weeks of winter if you are looking at your paycheck and tossing a coin between paying the rent or the snow plow guy.

There will be eight more weeks of winter if you are writing to the Mayor of Punxsutawney, PA and asking for a private appointment with their own "Dr. Phil."

to. In fact, a number of villages, after facing rising costs, became hamlets again."

A crucial issue to the creation of Dunehampton is the number of residents. The attorney from Sagaponack said, "The reason Heaney rejected Dunehampton is that there are in fact only about 230 eligible voters in the proposed Dunehampton area, while they claimed 1,079 residents. An eligible voter is someone who is qualified to vote (though they don't have to) and who doesn't vote anywhere else. New York State law says you need 550 residents to form a village. Of course, with children, you have more residents than eligible voters. But with 230 eligible voters in Dunehampton, it seems a stretch that there could be more than a thousand residents."

The issue of residency at the heart of the Dunehampton proposal is something that has not been precisely defined in New York State.

The attorney for Dunehampton, Joseph Procop, had not returned calls at presstime. The Sagaponack resident said, "What they did to get such an inflated number is to say that if a couple has their daughter and son-in-law and kids over for one week in the summer, that family is added to the residency rolls. This could be a precedent-setting case, if Dunehampton keeps pushing it. The court will have to decide just what constitutes a resident."

"In the past, a proposed village was all of one community. With Dunehampton, you're taking parts of several communities. A village should be of one community, not three or four patched together. I know the people in the community of Sagaponack; I don't have many dealings with people in Water Mill."

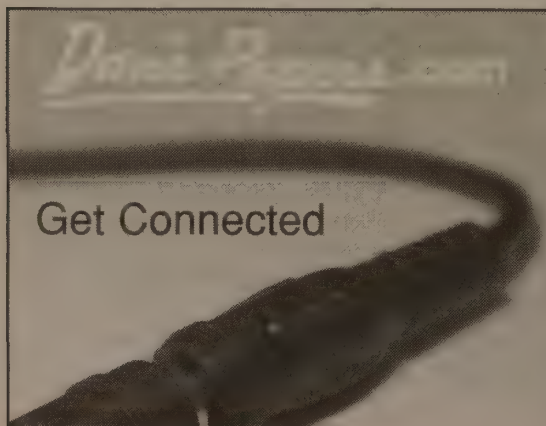

Dennis Suskind, a Southampton Town Councilman, also echoed dissatisfaction at the attempted breakup of communities. He added that he was disappointed in how many of the people behind Dunehampton have proceeded. "I've offered to sit down and talk with the Dunehampton people and they have refused. That doesn't sound like people who want to work something out. When farmers had complaints about what the town was or was not doing they came to public meetings and made their complaints known. They didn't say they were going to form a village of farmers. Instead, the town formed an Agriculture Advisory Committee. I also thought it wasn't fair when it was proposed that beachfront owners could not rebuild, but what they have done is not the way to solve the problem."

Mr. Suskind said that he is proposing a Waterfront Owners Advisory Committee. "I hope to present this at a public hearing this month and have it voted on by March. The committee would consist of a member of the planning Board, ZBA, and Conservation Board and a Trustee. They and the beachfront owners would consider new legislation affecting them, and or adjust current legislation."

"There are obviously problems living on the beach: it comes and goes. I know that in the 1920s there were telephone poles 90 feet out into the water in Sagaponack. This winter's been bad. The sand is so sharply worn away, the beach is like a cliff."

With so much opposition to Dunehampton, Dan Breen says, "People have the wrong idea of us. They think we're going to restrict beach access, which isn't true. They think we're going to put all kinds of structures on the beach and ruin it. We don't want to ruin what we live on. We just want to have a say in controlling our own property. What's wrong with that?"

This past December 22, Dunehampton filed its appeal — in New York State Supreme Court — on Supervisor Heaney's decision. A ruling on that should be forthcoming by the end of February. Meanwhile, in regards to the supervisor putting off Sagaponack's incorporation until the issue of Dunehampton is settled, the Sagaponack resident said, "Legally they are two separate cases. If the Dunehampton people appeal and appeal this could go on for years. But for now, we're waiting to see how the State Supreme Court rules."

Authors Writing About The Hamptons

Anthony Brandt is a freelance writer who has lived for the past nineteen years in Sag Harbor. He has written for a number of national magazines and is currently the book columnist for National Geographic Adventure. He is married to Lorraine Dusky and has a dog named Jack. Following is part of the introduction he wrote for the book The Hamptons Suite, a collection of photographs of the Hamptons, by Ken Robbins.

Introduction

The first time my brother came to visit me in the Hamptons some twelve or thirteen years ago I drove him to Sagaponack past the cemetery there and down Daniel's Lane, which runs parallel to the beach, and he was amazed. "The potato fields run right up to the back of the dunes!" he exclaimed. It was one of the first things I had noticed, too, when I moved out here. Where real estate development has yet to overtake them the farm fields and the beaches do indeed lie adjacent. Freshwater ponds open directly onto the sea. Houses dating to the eighteenth century still stand in the villages. My brother and I had been raised on the Jersey Shore on a barrier island. When I came here I wasn't used to all this, I had never seen it before, farms and beaches so close together, such quiet old resorts, the handsome old houses, or the light, above all the light, so soft yet so deep. The Jersey Shore was on the way even in my childhood to becoming a Queens with sand dunes and even then the sand dunes were vanishing, torn down so that the garish new houses behind them would have rooms with a view, while the marshes on the bay side were being filled in so that still more garish new houses could be built. All of them on sand. And the light on the Jersey Shore glares. It is a hard light; the ocean and the bay so close together bounce it around and intensify it, trees don't grow in the sand, there's no shade, no shelter, everything is naked, raw. Not here. Here is special. Here a vast filter seems to hang above us and it washes and softens the light and liquifies it so that the air seems to swim in light, so that the two, air and light, seem to be adrift in each other and there are no hard edges anywhere. Here the soil is so rich, so right that it is ranked among the best in the world and the farmhouses have long since settled in, have become organic to the place. There are trees here hundreds of years old, and treeless moors, and a forest on the moraine of stunted oak and pine full of pheasants and foxes. To calm myself I walk sometimes to the end of the gentle curve of Havens Beach in Sag Harbor, past the last house, and look out over the empty marsh there and the creek that winds through it and often see the long slender neck and elegant head of a great blue heron rising above the creek banks. I have seen hawks cruising this marsh, and in the harbor itself in the winter red-breasted mergansers with their sharp bills, their rakish crests make their home on the waters. Farther out on the rocks there may be seals. Once on Long Beach I saw a sunset so glorious, with the undersides of the ribbed clouds, themselves a palette of soft grays, all streaked with pinks and roses and purple, that I could only stand there rooted and watch it fade and feel sentimental and foolish and grateful all at once, tears springing to my eyes. Here the landscape is a kind of religion, just as full of silence and mystery, just as eloquent. Here the landscape feels like some great gift and the light that lies upon it, a benediction. For well over a century it has attracted artists, from Thomas Moran, who brought his own private gondola from Venice and floated it on Hook Pond, to Fairfield Porter and beyond, all of them enchanted, mesmerized by the light, by the long flat horizontals, the muted colors, the peace. It is a pastoral landscape, not a dramatic, but do not be deceived. That is the North Atlantic out there, and it is as wild as oceans come. And don't call it scenery. It is a habitat, lived in by an extraordinary diversity of life; it boasts in fact one of the most diverse ecosystems anywhere. In 1994 the Nature Conservancy listed it as one of thirteen of the last great places in the world. Which makes human beings only a small part of the whole. They come in armies but the foxes still thrive, stripers and blues still rule the surf, the raptors still rule the skies. Those of us who live here like the winters best. The people thin out, go back to the suburbs and the cities where the action is. Here the action is walking out to Cedar Point Light or watching the ice boats on those rare occasions when Sagg Pond or Mecox freeze up deeply enough for ice boats or taking your exercise on Gerard Drive, which borders Accabonac Harbor in Springs and may be on that score alone the most serene road in America. In winter the Hamptons are, indeed, a kind of well of serenity, from which you may drink at your pleasure. Drive in any direction and you will come to water and it will settle you down. Greater yellowlegs may be wandering in the shallows, with wintering buffleheads farther out. The place will quiet your mind. It is full of harbors, with all that that implies. It is a life's work if you are an artist. The liquidity of the light, the softness and depth of the colors are not easy things to transfer to two dimensions. The landscape generates painters but it is an illusion to think that painting it is simple. Its effects are elusive and transitory, the light changes like the tide, what was brilliant one day is pale the next.

The Hamptons Suite, published by Accabonac Press, is available at most bookstores for $45.

the "progress" of your order. On January 20, my order read "credit check."

"You've never had a cell phone before, so we have to see what your credit is," was the explanation. "This will take an extra few days."

"I've had a cell phone since 1991," I said.

"Then why did you check 'New Customer?'"

Now, I began seeing people with Treos in the park, on buses, walking happily down the street.

On January 24, I got an e-mail telling me that my order was now "being shipped." Later that day, I got another e-mail telling me my connection with AT&T had been approved by that company, and they were now waiting for me to do just that. The next day a box arrived.

Inside, I found an extra charger, an extra earpiece, a leather case and a car charger. There was an invoice enclosed. It said that my four accessories had been shipped and had now been charged to my credit card. The fifth item, the Treo itself, was on back order.

In a fury, I called Handspring and waited on hold for three minutes while a recorded message repeated "We now have the Treo in stock. Order it today! Delivery times are less than two weeks." Finally, I got a human being. She said "I don't understand this," and she also said there was no way to look into this, as those decisions were made at the factory.

"When might my Treo be shipped?" I asked.

"It's hard to say with a back order," she said. "Three weeks? A month?"

On January 26, I phoned Christine Wright at the AT&T president's office. I got her answering machine. I really laid into her. I haven't heard back from her.

Now, it has been announced that AT&T Wireless is up for sale. Everything is crashing down.

I've been looking into Sprint to see what they might have, but their service out here is spotty. There is a Verizon store nearby and I looked in there. Verizon has some nifty new phones and surely the best coverage here. But I am just going through the motions. In truth, I have a broken heart.

Sometimes, at night, I stand on the second floor balcony at my house and look longingly down the road for the Fed Ex truck. So far, nothing.

It's All There In Black And White

The Work Of Photographer Steve Berger

"The First Rays of Spring"

By Susan Whitney Simm

Steven Berger, born in Atlantic City during the 1940s, was introduced to the North Fork in 1988 by his wife, Ellen. Since then, he has spent the last decade capturing images on film of his adopted home, printing and mounting the results in his workshop/darkroom in Jamesport.

"The quality of light here enhances scenery that is almost too wonderful to be free for the gazing," says Steve of the North Fork. "The main visual attraction for me is the sky. Most days it is either vibrant blue or filled with spectacular cloud formations that reflect all of the moods one can experience or imagine. The stage backdrops of the New York theatre pale when compared to the settings God creates in the North Fork sky."

A very popular and recognizable image of Steve's, that of a quaint barn always adorned with an American flag on the Main Road in Laurel, has particular personal meaning for the artist.

"The brother of a friend of mine spent half his life in jail. He received a copy of my image as a gift, and it was literally the only piece of artwork he has ever owned. The thing is, the flag is hung in a way that symbolizes the international signal of distress. In a letter, he told me how much the image affected him. I think that black and white photography just has a powerful impact on people."

Self-portrait by the photographer

Steve Berger's work has received recognition and awards from various local venues, including East Hampton's Guild Hall. While he is currently working on a series of North Fork portfolios, the artist's work is available at Cecily's Love Lane Gallery in Mattituck (298-8610) and Blue Door in Riverhead (208-8166). What Are You Making Your Valentine For Dinner? Reservations, Of Course!

Valentine's Day falls on a Saturday this year, so we have a great excuse to celebrate weekend-long. Begin with a romantic evening, complete with Champagne or a local sparkler, at home on Friday. Head out to a few of our wineries for the annual Wine & Romance Weekend (see "By The Glass" this section) on Saturday before enjoying dinner for two at your favorite North Fork restaurant. Then top it off with brunch and a cozy afternoon with the Times on Sunday. Who needs chocolate when you have each other?

Following are a few suggestions on where to go on Saturday night. Reservations are a must at all locations.

-S.W.Simm, wine@danspapers.com

Bayview Inn & Restaurant in Aquebogue, "a new sparkler facing Peconic Bay" (Trueman-Honey review, 8/03), is offering a complete menu plus enticing specials in its charming dining rooms. Filling up fast, so call 722-2659. South Jamesport Ave. in South Jamesport.

Cooperage Inn in Baiting Hollow "continues to carry the banner of North Fork cuisine," (Simm review, 1/03). The restaurant is offering a dazzling menu for the evening, including Lobster Lovers' Ravioli. Call 727-8994. 2218 Sound Ave. Baiting Hollow.

Restaurant at the Inn at East Wind in Wading River with its "elegant dining room serving excellent a la carte dishes" (Bradbrook review, 8/03), will host a dinner dance for lovers complete with a four-course gourmet menu. 5720 Rt. 25A. Call 929-3500.

La Cuvee Wine Bar & Bistro at the Greenporter Hotel, a "gourmet bistro adjoining a hip boutique hotel footsteps from Greenport's vibrant downtown" (Bradbrook review, 4/03), is offering a sophisticated menu, including by-the-glass wine suggestions with each course. 326 Front Street, 477-0066.

Tuscan House is always romantic and the food is first rate. Join chef William Oster whose "virtuosity lies in the care with which he pairs his 16 pastas and sublime sauces" (Bradbrook review, 9/03). Open for lunch and dinner on February 14. 673 Osborn Ave., Riverhead. 727-2330.

The following establishments could not be reached at press time. Please call for details:

Fauna, a "hip and elegant culinary gem" (Trueman-Honey review 6/17/02). Aquebogue, 722-5813. Ile de Beaute, very romantic and charming restaurant in downtown Greenport. 477-2822. La Plage, exciting and imaginative cuisine just steps away from a L.I. Sound beach. Superb wine list. Wading River, 744-9200. Red Door, where Stephan Mazzella, formerly of Lespinasse, excites the palate. Mattituck, 298-4800. The Shady Lady Restaurant is a vision of stately elegance. Dinner jackets de rigueur in the Scarlet Room. Greenport, 477-4500. Touch of Venice serves top-notch Italian cuisine in a delightful setting on Mattituck Inlet. 298-5851. The Seafood Barge. The North Fork restaurant destination for fish lovers. Lovely dining room overlooking Port of Egypt Marina. Southold, 765-3010. Stonewall's. Haute cuisine in a tranquil setting at the Woods Course at Cherry Creek in Riverhead. 506-0777.

Third Annual Long Island Wine & Romance Weekend

Music, art, chocolate and wine will help visitors dig out from the winter blues as more than 20 wineries offer special events and happenings at their tasting rooms.

Visitors to Long Island Wine Country will experience beautiful music and art, sip great wine accompanied by delicious artisanal cheeses, enjoy gourmet chocolates and chocolate fondues, taste the delights of vintage olive oil, be able to purchase exceptional wine bargains, enter special raffles, participate in creative cake decorating demonstrations, have fun with karaoke and sushi, and more.

Visitors will also receive, while supplies last, the next in the series of highly popular complimentary food and wine pairing recipe booklets. This issue celebrates gourmet recipes from top Long Island and New York City Chefs such as Christian Albin from The Four Seasons, James Carpenter of Della Femina, and David

Silvia Lehrer's Cooking Column

Scallops are a bivalve mollusk commonly referred to in French as coquille St. Jacques for St. James the Apostle. I visited the province of Galicia in north-west Spain several years ago where Santiago de Compostela is the capital. There is celebrity to the scallop in Santiago de Compostela (Santiago is James in Spanish) as it represents the spiritual protection of the apostle whose legendary miracles are connected to the creamy white mollusk. The city is well known for the journey devout pilgrims have taken, with sea shells dangling from their hats and walking sticks, since the 15th century (a documented account) from all over Europe to the Santiago cathedral.

It is only in the last couple of years that I have seen scallops sold at retail with their delicate coral roe attached to their shell – and at a premium price. In the United States scallops are mostly sold without their coral and their shells. Scallops are generally shucked at sea and just the abductor muscle, the white edible cylinder that opens and closes its shell, remains. When preparing scallops for cooking it is important to remove the sinewy pieces attached to their sides, which are tough and rubbery.

Scallops can be prepared in such a great variety of ways. For this time of the year I have chosen to poach our local sea scallops in a warming citrusy broth with saffron, an inspired classic of Spanish origin. Warm scallop and hazelnut salad is perfect for those who can't resist the lure of salads even at this time of the year.

WARM SCALLOP SALAD WITH CHICORY AND RADICCHIO

The cold weather combination of local bay scallops, chicory and radicchio make elegant wintry fare.

Serves 6

2-3 ounces of chicory

1 small head radicchio
4 tablespoons unsalted butter
1 pound Peconic Bay scallops
Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste
2-3 large shallots, finely chopped
1 cup red wine vinegar
Snipped chives for garnish

1. Wash and spin-dry chicory and radicchio separately. Spread each green in paper towels to absorb excess moisture. Can be prepared up to one day ahead and refrigerated in plastic zip lock bags. When ready to serve, bring greens to room temperature and divide equally on 6 plates.

2. Melt 1 tablespoon butter in a skillet and when butter is sizzling, put in the scallops. Cook quickly over medium high heat for 1 1/2 minutes each side. Season with salt and pepper and transfer scallops equally over the greens.

3. Melt additional 1 tablespoon butter in the same skillet and saute the shallots for two to three minutes, just until translucent. Add red wine vinegar and bring to a boil, scraping the skillet with a wooden spoon to deglaze pan juices. Reduce liquid by one half, then over low heat whisk in small pieces of remaining butter, one piece at a time, to slightly thicken pan juices. Season to taste with salt and pepper. Drizzle the warm sauce over the scallops. Sprinkle with chives and serve at once.

POACHED SCALLOPS IN CITRUS BROTH WITH SAFFRON

If butter is eliminated this is a dieter's delight.

Serves 4

1 pound sea scallops

2/3 cup Vermouth
2/3 cup water
3-4 scallions, trimmed, white and light green parts
Celery leaves
3 sprigs flat-leaf parsley
1 small bay leaf
1/2 coarse (kosher) salt
1/8 teaspoon saffron threads

To finish

3 tablespoons mixed fresh thyme leaves and basil julienne
2 teaspoons fresh lemon juice
Coarse (kosher) salt and freshly ground pepper
1 tablespoon unsalted butter, cut into pieces, optional

1. Remove tough sinewy pieces attached to the scallops and reserve. Rinse scallops and set aside.

2. Put remaining ingredients in a wide saucepan with the reserved sinews and bring to a boil. Adjust heat to medium and simmer briskly for 3 minutes until syrupy. Put in the scallops, (the liquid should barely cover them) and cook for 1 1/2 minutes turning half way through. Remove scallops with a slotted spoon to a side dish and reserve. Bring the liquid back up to a boil and cook over high heat until reduced by half. Strain into a small saucepan, discarding solids.

3. Add the herbs, lemon juice and seasonings to the broth and stir to mix. Simmer over medium heat and whisk in the butter, piece by piece if using, to enrich the sauce. Taste for lemon, salt and pepper. Return the scallops to the broth and simmer just to warm them about 1 minute. Serve on warm plates with citrus saffron broth and crusty bread.

Dining In The Hamptons

On February 14th Della Femina of East Hampton will offer a Valentine's Day prix fixe. The five course special will be served for $65 per person. An a la carte menu will also be available. The special Valentine's Day menu will include: tuna tartar with sesame crisp; porcini "love letters" with marscapone; seared organic salmon with braised artichokes; grilled prime filet of beef; garlic crusted rack of lamb; and for dessert, frozen passion fruit soufflé. Call Della Femina at 329-6666 for more info.

Also celebrating Valentine's Day with a special prix fixe, Tierra Mar in Westhampton Beach will offer a four course menu for $60 per person. Some menu selections are: six local oysters on the half shell; Pennsylvania free range bison carpaccio with organic basil oil; oven roasted lobster and plum tomato bisque; pan seared aged sliced top sirloin with wine sauce, sautéed cremini mushrooms, grilled vegetables and oven roasted new potatoes; and local organic vegetable stir-fry with garlic, ginger and soy. Dessert options are also included. Call 288-2700 for more information on the complete menu or to make reservations.

Villa Italian Specialties in East Hampton has recently finished up a series of renovations to update their store. They replaced the old high deli and sausage case with lower display cases allowing customers to see the person they are placing their order with. They also replaced the self-serve refrigeration with a large open case, which makes it easier for customers to access their new "grab & go" selections, which include a variety of salads (Caesar, mixed green, or tomato and mozzarella with pesto) and desserts (chocolate torte, ricotta cheesecake, tiramisu, and almond torte). Villa's new look was completed by painting the ceiling, staining all of the woodwork, and adding new shelving in the store. Also new at Villa, dessert items such as cheesecake, chocolate torte, and seasonal pies (baked fresh by the pastry chef at Nick & Toni's) and a new panini machine, with daily panini specials - or create your own. For further information call 324-5110.

Mighty Aphrodite

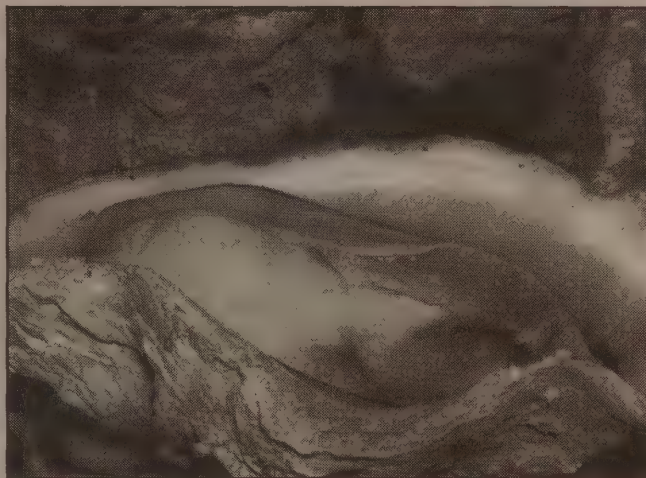

"Ouga, Ouga, Ouga Chak-a!... I can't stop this feeling, deep inside of me. Girl, you just don't realize what you do to me." Blue Swede said it best in the song, "Hooked on a Feeling." The wheels start turning, the lights go dim, and two people meld into one being. Is it the romantic music? Or is it the perfume? Or maybe it has to do with what's on the menu for dinner.

Yes, ever since ancient times of the Greeks and Romans people have believed in the effects that different foods have on behavior and intimacy. Whether it is licorice or ginseng, anchovies or scallops, there are entire alphabets of foods that would make even Casanova smile. These foods, along with drinks, scents and devices promoting desire and increased libido are what can be called aphrodisiacs. The word stems from the name Aphrodite, the Greek goddess of love and beauty, and has grown to encompass a wide range of "natural enhancers," both designer and country-kitchen style.

In the days of yesteryear, foods got their aphorismatic titles for a couple of reasons. Spicy foods, including some curries and chilies, sometimes created a raised heart rate and sweating, similar to what happens when two people are engaged. Uncommon foods were considered arousers because of their mystery and intrigue, while sometimes foods were thought to be aphrodisiacs simply because, like oysters and rhinoceros horns, they resembled the appropriate parts of the anatomy. And even further, in some Eastern cultures it was believed that ingesting the reproductive organs of animals such as goats and rabbits (that are known to procreate well and often) could only help one's luck in the bedroom.

Regardless of the reasoning for why certain foods gained their reputations for creating tingling sensations, the scientific backing is difficult to pinpoint. So much of intimacy is based on psychological states, feelings and emotions that it is nearly impossible to determine what makes a frog into a prince in one specific moment. Also, research has been limited due to the taboo-ness of the topic and the fact that the mind itself can be the aphrodisiac, thus making the placebo effect rather difficult.

In addition, the physical benefits of different foods on the body can be elusive, since overall good health and a well-balanced diet promote self confidence, as well as intimacy and desire. For example, since Aphrodite was said to have come from the sea, many types of seafood have been said to be aphrodisiac, yet oysters may have gained their reputation simply because they added zinc into a person's diet, leveling deficiencies and promoting good health and well being.

In regard to designer enhancers, evidence is also up for debate. In the late eighties, the US Food and Drug Administration (FDA) stated that there was no scientific proof that over-the-counter aphrodisiacs really work. Quite the contrary, some may actually be toxic to humans. And yet the industry thrives, raking in millions a year.

But if you feel as though your need to live is stronger than the needs of your libido, and the idea of eating fungus from the larvae of a moth or drinking tonic made from soaking tiger, bear, and deer anatomy in rice wine (like some people do in Hong Kong), doesn't quite strike your fancy, there are plenty of commonplace aphrodisiacs that you can find in your own kitchen. Garlic, for one, has been used as an aphrodisiac for years by the Egyptians, Greeks, Romans, Chinese, and Japanese. Do they know something that we don't?

So maybe this Valentine's Day, instead of popping a Viagra and helping Pfizer beat its $1 billion dollar gross in one year record, you can try cooking something up for your honey. Some people believe that it's all in your head, but maybe Mighty Aphrodite will be on your side. There's only one way to find out.

Guy de Fraumeni's Hollywood in The Hamptons

For those of y'ez stuck in the glacier ice cap that once was your home sweet home, I'd like to suggest that you put an on - hi blow dryer to your imitation bunny, fur-lined boots and your favorite ear-flapped ice cap, and make your way to the closest movie house and buy a round trip ticket to a Hawaiian vacation, so care-free and warming you won't even care that the film itself isn't so hot. Once you've succumbed to the sunny disposition of The Big Bounce's thawing pleasures, you may want to peel off the bunny fur and faux leather and relax in the real imitation stuff that dreams are made of. If the management objects to your basking in bikinis and Speedos, tell them I sent you. If you have a cold thermos of pina colodas made from the packages of dry powdered chemicals, all the better to enjoy this movie that is far from the genuinely entertaining, quirky, off-the-wall capers of the ubiquitous Elmore Leonard's guffaw - crime novels that translated into movies like Get Shorty and Out Of Sight.

The Big Bounce is an un-genuine and ingenious spin-off of the light Film Noir genre (excuse the French, President Bush) pretty much owned by Mr. Leonard. The body of his work has been so picked over, only the skeleton of his very first dive into clumsy criminality has been used for this screen venture. George Armitage, the director, and his screenwriter have managed to completely obfuscate Leonard's usually fast and direct plotting, with which he can reveal the absurdity of his peculiar people. But, what the hey! This gang of beachcombers enjoy it oh-so-very-much in their own semi-masochistic ways, you'd easily imagine them as backup people for Jimmy Buffett's music - replete with sandal sores. It's not surprising to see Willie Nelson and Harry Dean Stanton loafing back there behind Owen Wilson as Mr. Leonard's favored crooked little crook. Owen at one time worked for a real bad guy, kind of mob connected, who is grimly done by Gary Sinise. This bad guy is also a land and hotel developer (they're probably the same thing). Owen then gets mix-mastered with the venerable actor Morgan Freeman as a judge and, not unusual in Hawaii, where land is Doled out in cans, the judge also deals in real estate for gullible vacationers. Added to the swirly blend is Sara Foster as Sinise's mistress. She's the sweet, pulpy, cream of coconut, high-caloric ingredient that gets the boys to wade into the big score surf over their heads. Otherwise, she's breaking into houses and wearing as little as a PG-13 rating will allow.

It is to be allowed that no one involved in this flick is feeling any pain. You get the feeling that they're all enjoying a boozy, snoozy respite from the rigors of Hollywood's Palm tree and health food contaminated jungle. Their appearances on screen are as brief as the women's attire and their arrival on the set is not at all different from where they spent the night.

They're carousing full-time. So, what's a vacation for? You don't want day-by-day planning to fuzz and dull a good time. Your average criminal may have some smarts, but it doesn't mean he or she has to apply them. If they actually did, they'd stay on the straight and narrow.

The sun, surf and pineapple juice have caused others to stray - Charlie Sheen and Bebe Neuwirth collide with pina colada comedy. Don't ask me to describe exactly what their role is, I was too relaxed to take notes. Right now, I don't want to mess up Elmore Leonard's franchise; it has already been raided by too many writers and filmmakers. Certainly, his work deserves it; however, even more so, perhaps it is time to take his light Film Noir less lightly. Maybe someone will dig into the dark shadows his bright aspects create. They're there; you have to let your eyes get used to the darkness. It is time to come in out of the warm, lazy-making sun.

Guy-Jean de Fraumeni is the producer/ writer/ director of award-winning European and American feature films. He has been a judge at major film and TV award competitions, including the Oscars, the Emmy's and various film festivals. He is assisted by Sarah Halsey.

ART COMMENTARY By Marion Wolberg Weiss

ARTS - IN - EDUCATION

Part 1

Each winter this column turns from the commercial/professional sector of art to the educational one, canvassing the various local venues where aspiring young artists obtain their training and inspiration. It seems appropriate to begin with art in the public high schools.

Sag Harbor's Pierson High School and Middle School are unique places regarding creative endeavors. The reasons? Continuing support from the arts-oriented community, and a professional focus that art teachers Peter Solow and Joe Bartolotti bring to the program.

A visit to Mr. Solow's class proves the point regarding professionalism. The ambience is fairly informal, befitting the arts, but there's a no-nonsense approach as well. Mr. Solow's critiques are succinct, peppered with flip yet respectful remarks. There's no hand-holding here. The students are treated like adults, but they become Mr. Solow's children, too, when sometimes a subtle, proud tone creeps into his voice.

On this particular morning, an architect chats informally about his profession, and a former student drops in to say hello. At other times, an artist like Linda Capello may give figure drawing lessons (complete with a model). On another occasion, a representative from New York's School of Visual Arts may instruct pupils regarding portfolio presentations. While this informal setting works, Mr. Solow nonetheless believes in a "formal approach to the curriculum."

"We emphasize structure in the program," he explains. "The process of creating art, how you go about it. This empowers the students to make art, to have an authentic voice."

We think there are other dimensions to this "voice," however; aspects that combine the program's ascribed formal method while also encouraging creativity, individuality and risk-taking. For example, Mr. Solow describes the independent projects, like the designing of the school's exterior courtyard. Or the art trips he and Mr. Bartolotti take with students each year to Italy. Or the self-portrait assignment and discussions about the nature of art.

Most telling, perhaps, is the student work itself that adorns the main halls, endeavors not merely put away in display cases. There is one large, figurative piece featuring Mr. Solow and his class, as well as still lifes, collages and assemblages. What's intriguing, however, is the diverse subject matter. On our visit, we saw various works devoted to sports and politics: for example, September 11 and President Bush ("Just One of the Crowd").

Mr. Solow puts it best. "There isn't a person in school who can't do something wonderful."

Peter Solow in class

HONORING THE ARTIST: RANDY DUNHAM

Artist Randy Dunham, a long-time resident of New York State, has brought new meaning to the word "Surrealism," while also following the term's traditional definition. As this week's cover demonstrates, the artist's concept of juxtaposing incongruent objects denotes one aspect of Surrealism. In fact, Mr. Dunham's primary thrust is contrasting nature with science/industry; more particularly, making inanimate objects appear life-like through lighting and movement.

As Mr. Dunham explains it, "I like to isolate items which in themselves may be insignificant. But by enlarging that item or throwing two objects together that don't normally exist together, an exciting new image is created."

The artist also uses Surrealism in a second way: his work shows the "super real," where he randomly selects shapes, arranging them into a spectacle of sorts.

Regardless of Surrealism's definition, however, Mr. Dunham describes his work as "reflection, refraction and transparency," a phrase that says it all.

Even so, Mr. Dunham didn't always have a signature style or, for that matter, paint at all. While he always liked drawing from an early age, it wasn't until a few years ago that he decided to paint full-time. Simply put, it took several years for Mr. Dunham to find himself.

After graduating from the New York State School for the Deaf, Mr. Dunham entered Rochester Institute of Technology where he studied applied art and medical lab technology (perhaps this is where his interest in science first appeared). He left college in three years and started a property business with a partner. In the mid-1980s, Mr. Dunham began a picture framing shop. All this time, however, he had a yearning to paint something more challenging, using a more exciting style than the realistic approach he had pursued in college.

It wasn't until Mr. Dunham showed some new art work to a businessman that his career took a turn for the best. The man encouraged him to create from his imagination, from his own thoughts and ideas, rather than produce works which were copies of reality.

Lo and behold, Mr. Dunham was making art reflecting his own vision of reality, works that were "standouts and real wonders," says agent Joyce Lundeen, when asked over the phone what initially drew her to Mr. Dunham's pieces.

Yours truly couldn't help but see the irony of the phone interview conducted with Ms. Lundeen: right in the middle of Orlando's Disney World, complete with background noise, music and general confusion.

It would have made a perfect setting for Mr. Dunham's surreal paintings.

Dan's Papers ROMANCING IN THE HAMPTONS

Getting Through Valentine's Day

February 14th is just around the corner, as if we needed a reminder. Who could possibly remain unaware of this imminent day, with visions of radiant reds of every hue, and lavish jewels signaling the arrival the one day of the year where we put our true affections to the test? A day where commercialism is at its best, where we buy our love? No, folks, this is not Christmas. Then, at least, love is shared by all — people are givers and receivers. But on this day, St. Valentine's Day, reciprocity does not apply. On this day men are forced to conform, to either shower the lady in their lives with riches untold or face the dreaded consequences. The aroma of chocolates and flowers can be smelled wafting through the air everywhere we turn. The symbols of this sanctimonious holiday are pushed directly in our line of sight, without a chance for us to look away. So in preparation for this holiday I ask you to reflect on the proverbial arrow that our winged friend, Cupid, has aimed straight for our hearts and ask ourselves, "Isn't something amiss?"

I have set out on a quest to unlock one of life's little mysteries, to answer the question as to why we, as a society, have difficulty embracing this warm, fuzzy, feel-good holiday. Is Cupid actually to blame or is he just a scapegoat in a culture filled with insecurities? When you think of Valentine's Day, what immediately rushes to your mind? Is it images of hearts and flowers, chocolate cordials and teddy bears, Cupid's arrow, or even love? Or do you fixate on the desperation of it all, obsessing over the fact that you are alone once again, that nobody loves you, and you are nobody's valentine? Or perhaps you may become reduced to a child-like state, reminiscent of elementary school, when little ones hand out construction paper hearts with the words, "Be Mine," scrawled across the top in crayon. Even then, did we not anguish over the frightful thought that we might not receive any Valentines, which would cause us to come to the realization that we were losers, unloved, and unnoticed? And even if you have a special someone in your life, what if your partner doesn't come through when it really counts during this all important love fest? If he doesn't measure up, inevitably falling short of the standards we have set, then we may pine over what could have been, what it would be like to be in the arms of someone who is the embodiment of romance.

What does it all mean, anyway? Why does this day corrupt our hearts and minds so? Whether or not we have a significant other, what it boils down to is disappointment and heartache. A day filled with anxiety-riddled men out searching for the perfect gift, or at least just something to keep their partners at bay. This all important day must be planned far in advance. It must be creative as well as romantic. No more card and candy. Oh no fellas, that's not going to cut it any longer. Now, it's a weekend getaway, tickets to the ballet or the opera, a candlelit dinner followed by champagne and bubble baths, or even the recitation of a well-

That it's a time to be shared with close friends, appreciating that you are a woman who can stand on her own, with an entire world of possibilities just waiting around every corner? I say we take back this holiday! Why not take matters into our own hands if we are unsatisfied, and bring romance back to Valentine's Day?

I asked my boyfriend the other day, "What's the point of Valentine's Day anyway?" And he answered very simply, "It's a day to spend time with the one you love." Those pure words sum it all up, and caused me to reflect on the phrase, the one you love. The one you love doesn't have to be a partner. Is it possible to program ourselves to believe that Valentine's Day can be a celebration with a close friend, a sibling, a parent, grandparent or even a pet? If Unconditional Love is what we are all truly searching for, doesn't this make sense? Instead of reducing singles to tears by throwing public displays of affection in their faces, instead of making this day all about couples (because believe me, I know how awful it feels when you're unattached), why not make it all about love?

We should always keep in mind that instead of placing an inordinate amount of pressure on this one day, what we need to do is to make an effort each and every day. We must capture many special moments and remember that it is not possible for love to be expressed all in one day. On Valentine's Day we should open up our hearts and make them a little bit bigger, and if we don't already have a Valentine, then we should go out and make someone smile. Generosity on Valentine's Day would make it a day that we could all embrace wholeheartedly.

Hah, who am I really kidding? Easier said than done.

crafted poem (hey, it worked for Ryan, that's how he snatched up Trista).

So what kind of message are we sending here? Basically what we're saying is that the more money that is spent on us, the more we are loved. Of course, we all know that these holidays are just consumer money pits conspired by the greeting card, chocolate, florist, and jewelry industries to make more money off of us hopeless saps who buy into it. For some women, the entire Valentine's Day is based on whose partner is more romantic, and the competition is fierce. Somehow we constantly compare ourselves to others, and we never measure up. We make ourselves feel inadequate. We always want more and more. Do we ever just appreciate the precious time spent alone with the ones we love, to celebrate all that they are and all that they mean to us?

As for the single women, do you ever think that this night could be spent on the town, all decked out, embracing your freedom and independence?

theatre review: the boy from oz... by gordin & christiano

The Boy From Oz, the new Broadway musical now playing at the Imperial Theatre, is based on the life and music of the entertainer and songwriter Peter Allen, who died from AIDS in 1993 at the age of 48. Hugh Jackman (famous for the "X-Men" films) in the central role is absolutely dazzling, making an unforgettable Broadway debut that is surely destined to win every major theatrical award.

Boy traces Mr. Allen's life from his humble beginnings in the Australian outback through his rise to fame as an international star, who, at the height of his career, would sell out week-long engagements at Radio City Music Hall. He began singing in country pubs at the age of 11, survived an abusive father to become a local TV star at 16, and after coming to America was discovered by Judy Garland. He married her daughter Liza Minnelli and became a charismatic and successful performer and an Oscar-winning songwriter. All of this is in the biographical staging of Mr. Allen's life, along with his divorce from Ms. Minnelli, his bisexuality, and subsequent gay relationship.

Peter Allen was certainly a camp figure of the 70s and 80s, embodying the "me" generation's hedonistic philosophies, but not exactly an inspired choice for the focus of a Broadway musical. In the book by Martin Sherman, he certainly does not come across as a particularly likeable guy, except on stage. Mr. Allen appears to be a person unable to honestly grasp the source of his feelings, but this is not delved into. Was it drugs or just shallowness? We are left to guess and wonder. What was the real motivation for the marriage to Minnelli? In skirting the issues, the story lacks poignancy and is unaffectionate. The songs by Peter Allen, although lovely, seem forced into the plot and are not necessarily appropriate to the unfolding of the narrative.

All this would seem to be an overwhelming burden for leading man Hugh Jackman, but no, Mr. Jackman is up to the Herculean task of transcending the material, and his work is even more astounding as a result. His dancing absolutely glows in a physical performance which is showmanship personified. He confirms the praise of his wonderful work in the 1998 London revival of Oklahoma and the Carnegie Hall concert version of Carousel last year. There are hardly enough superlatives to describe what the marvelous singer, dancer, and actor manages to accomplish with such apparent ease. He is an authentic star and everything in the production almost pales in comparison.

The rest of the cast are accomplished professionals, burdened in one way or another by either cardboard characters, or real life characters impossible to portray within the limits of the script. However, Beth Fowler as Allen's mother is most effective and Mitchel David Federan is outstanding as the young Allen. The characterizations of Judy Garland and Ms. Minnelli, played by Isabel Keating and Stephanie Block, respectively, are the most disturbing. As written, they are more caricatures than real life personalities. Ms. Keating has the Garland look and mannerisms down so perfectly that it is jarring when she doesn't sing like her. Ms. Block is burdened with difficult dialogue like "I carry a lot of baggage," and ill-suited songs, along with the unenviable task of portraying the very much living and larger-than-life Liza. How does one compare to the real thing, which hovers omnipresent in our mind's eye?

The Boy from Oz also suffers from a lack of candor in dealing with Allen's relationship with his companion Greg Connell, played by Jarrod Emick. A little more scratching beneath the surface would have gone a long way in elevating the material beyond the showbiz razzle-dazzle of a Las Vegas spectacle, but then there is the glorious, sublime, splendid Hugh Jackman. Mr. Jackman embodies the pure essence of Peter Allen's onstage personality and he almost single-handedly turns the evening into a spectacular Broadway happening. Without his presence the evening would be nothing more than a flamboyant walk down memory lane, lacking any panache or style.

The Boy From Oz is playing at Broadway's Imperial Theatre (249 West 45th Street) Tuesday-Saturday at 8 p.m., matinees on Wednesday & Saturday at 2 p.m. and Sunday at 3 p.m. For tickets call 212-239-6200.

The 12th Annual Student Arts Festival At Guild Hall

This year's annual Students Arts Festival opens at Guild Hall on February 7th. Once again, young talented students will have a venue to showcase their work in a variety of media. Students from various Amagansett, Bridgehampton, East Hampton, Montauk, Sag Harbor, and Wainscott schools will all participate. Exhibits include paintings, sculpture, printmaking, photography, video and multi-media works. The opening reception for students, families and friends will be held on February 7th from 1 to 3 p.m. Public admission is free for the month of February.

For the first time in the Festival's history, a Video Visions: Student Filmmakers category will be added. Aspiring young filmmakers from the East End middle and high schools will have the opportunity to showcase their work in front of a professional audience that will include Billy Jett, Executive Director, LTV, (Channel 20); Tricia Abate, Programming Coordinator, Hamptons International Film Festival; Josh Gladstone, Artistic Director, The John Drew Theater; and Roberta W. Ginsberg, Ed. D., Director of Education, Guild Hall, who will judge the film entries. Awards will be given in several categories. The first place winner will be screened at the 2004 HIFF in October.

Winning films will also be shown at The John Drew Theater of Guild Hall and on LTV. Deadline for submissions is February 9th. Entrants should submit their films on a standard VHS format or CD to Guild Hall. Winners will be notified by Friday, February 13. Public screening of films will be at Guild Hall on February 28th. For more information on Video Visions: Student Filmmakers please contact the Education Department of Guild Hall at 324-0806.

She has already made up fabulous gift baskets that will thrill everyone on your gift list. The store is full of great cards, giftware, toys, and a one-stop shop for your holiday shopping needs.

Hildreth's Department Store on Main Street in Southampton is geared for Valentine's Day shopping with raffles, contests and romantic new gift items. A few new items for this special day include Bearington Bears from $14.95 to $34.95, silver wire heart boxes with cranberry truffles for $9.95 and PJ's by Lotus in snowflake or dragonfly motifs for $64. The "Love Is In The Air" raffle from now 'til February 14, where one winner will be chosen to win a beautiful Roberto Coin 18k gold necklace from London Jewelers, and no purchase is necessary. Another is the "Gift Certificate Challenge" with a $30 purchase at the Southampton store; there will be a contest box with keys. If you pick the right key that unlocks the box you can win a $100 gift certificate. At all locations the "Ugly Sofa" contest is a hoot! Call the store and find out for yourself exactly what it is about...No kidding. 631-283-2300 extension 43.

Nearby at Rose Jewelers you can get a free gift of a red leather heart shaped jewelry travel case when you purchase your valentine gift of $250 or more. Say "I love you" with diamond hearts, sterling silver bracelets or necklaces with hearts, and hugs and kisses bracelets and necklaces. Don't forget that great guy in your life; choose from cufflinks, key rings, watches and a Lynn Chase martini set...

A brand new shop has opened at the Citarella Plaza in Watermill called La Vie Designer Resale. It is located behind the Watermill Post office, across from Mirkos Restaurant where there is lots of parking available. You will find some wonderful merchandise here including Charles David's black leather knee high boots $35, Diesel jeans $28, Giorgio Armani black cashmere sweatercoat with a removable turkey feather collar for $500, Poncho's for $55, Zara to Fendi leather/calf hair pants from $20 to $225, JCrew corduroy cashmere mini-skirt from $25 to $225 and for Valentine's Day check out the jewelry by designer Deanna Barrett: semi-precious stones ranging from $80 to $390 and so on and so on...Check it out and tell Kimberly I scooped you first!

Also at the Citarella Plaza at Double Rainbow on Montauk Highway in Watermill, where they feature the largest selection of Godiva in the Hamptons, look for great Valentine gifts for everyone on your sweet list. For only $30 you can get the "Grande Desire" gift box with twenty-five pieces of assorted truffles and chocolates, a beautiful romantic chocolate heart for $45, a one pound Valentine's Day Ballotin with thirty-six pieces of assorted chocolates (half pound of the same is only $23.50). You can also order online and they will ship anywhere in the USA; on to their website: www.hamptonchocolate.com or call 631-726-2582. If you are also looking for cards and stuffed toys, games, goodies and more, this is the place...

Don't forget to bring your checkbooks to the "Love Bites" at Jean Luc Restaurant in East Hampton this Saturday evening, February 7, and get those Valentine's Day gifts at the live auction or raffle! Items include a trip to South Beach, cashmere and mink wrap or a mink vest, or bid on the rental of a new Porsche Carrera for your summer weekend in the Hamptons. Or how about a chauffeured Bentley or Rolls Royce for the day and evening? A sail on a 42-ft. yacht? A Tiffany & Co. watch, New York City theatre package including hotel, limo, dinner at Gotham Bar & Grill? Or perhaps if working out is your pleasure - bid on Gym Source's Nautilus upright exercise bike! The choices are yours! The only thing is, you must have tickets already for this sold out event!

Off the beaten path a bit: At The Magic Needle on Main Street in Sayville you have so much to choose from from gifts to things for your home. There is a store wide sale on selected merchandise. Look for great buys on custom painted furniture, window treatments, bed, bath, table linens and accessories. There are also special occasion dresses, christening gowns and bridal and baby registry too...A very special service (not on sale) is her monogramming of nursery linens. Give a call at 631-218-8484.

Until next week. Ciao and Happy Valentine's Day Shopping! And...have a special Valentine's Day 2004.

When In Manhattan...

I Love Central Park in June – or February

Central Park is one of the great mainstay attractions in Manhattan. There's a lot to do there, but it's such a staple of the city that people may forget it when planning destinations for their weekend. Some might not know that Central Park was the first landscaped public park in the United States. Acquired by wealthy landowners and merchants in 1853, the more than 700 acres of land in the center of Manhattan were to offer an attractive setting for carriage rides and provide working class New Yorkers with a healthy alternative to the saloon. After three years of debate over the park site and cost, the state legislature authorized the City of New York to use the power of eminent domain to create a place to rival the public grounds in London and Paris that they so admired.

An irregular terrain of swamps and bluffs, punctuated by rocky glacial deposits made the land between Fifth and Eighth avenues and 59th and 106th streets challenging for urban development. There were, however, roughly 1,600 poor residents, including Irish pig farmers and German gardeners, who lived in shanties on the site. They were quickly displaced, and soon the modern city was born. The extension of the boundaries to 110th Street in 1863 brought the park to its current 843 acres.

A year later, in 1864, the Central Park Zoo was created to house the many animals donated to the park, beginning with eight deer in the late 1850s. What was once a few small cages and a less-than-perfect-environment for the animals changed dramatically in 1988. The 5-1/2 acre zoo still has its sea lions and polar bears, but now houses its menagerie in several state-of-the-art buildings, from the aviary to the reptile house, and receives up to a million guests a year. The aviary is like entering another world. Coming from the gray concrete landscape of taxicabs and hot dog vendors to this large open air space with no cages and lush vegetation is a thrill. Inside, birds fly freely as visitors stroll along elevated boardwalks in search of the many species featured on ID cards along the rails. For those in search of creatures more fit for our current climate, there is the penguin house, with feedings every day at 10:30 a.m. and 2:30 p.m., sea lions in their outdoor pool with feedings at 11:30 a.m. and 2 p.m., snow monkeys, and of course the polar bears. Don't be shy directing questions to one of the wildlife guides who cover the grounds. They are easily identified in their outfits à la Steve Erwin, the Crocodile Hunter, complete with jungle hat. The Central Park Zoo and Wildlife Center is located on 64th Street and 5th Avenue and is open daily from 10 am to 5 p.m. (closes at 4:30 p.m. during the winter). Call (212) 861-6030 for tours and info.

One of the newer additions to Central Park worth seeing is The Charles A. Dana Discovery Center, located at the Northeast corner at the Harlem Meer. The Center, which opened in 1993, is the Park's only environmental educational center, with children's workshops year-round. It sponsors free workshops, musical performances and Park tours. The coolest offering is the rare opportunity to go fishing in New York City. The Dana Center loans fishing poles for fishing in the Meer and actually encourages unlicensed catch and release fishing. Since its opening, the Center has become popular for those looking for a relaxing place to spend an afternoon.

Central Park is huge, and loaded with things to do. Take a walk around, remember why you loved going there as a child, and discover all it has to offer. During your travels, don't forget to skate at Wollman Rink, look for the famous carousel or the boat pond and nearby Alice in Wonderland statue, walk the Sheep's Meadow, enjoy the playgrounds, or just find a big rock to climb. If you're feeling daring, sneak on to the roof of the Plaza Hotel and take in the park from above. It's a magnificent sight.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

The Animal Rescue Fund of the Hamptons, Inc. (ARF) needs doghouses to distribute to needy families to help keep outdoor dogs and cats warm. During these extremely cold winter days, it is advisable to keep your pets indoors. But, if you have to keep your pets outside, you must provide them with shelter. A doghouse with straw bedding is ideal. If you have a doghouse to donate to ARF, please call 537-0400 ext. 201. Thanks!

Keeping The Place Clean

One of the most difficult things to do when you are living with a couple of twenty-year-old males in an apartment in Boston is to keeping the place clean and cooking food on a regular basis. It really is next to impossible. You would not believe it.

I have been trying desperately to figure out the root of the problem. It is not like we are these horrible slobs. All three of us, in my opinion anyway, are pretty regular guys. We all grew up knowing it is important to clean the dishes after you eat, to make your bed when you wake up, and to hang your coat up when you walk in the door. All of us, before we moved into the apartment, had agreed that we would all make an even effort to keep our place clean when we moved in.

Well, we didn't. And we don't. There are dishes in our sink that have been sitting there for approximately two weeks. We use empty pizza boxes as plates. I eat pizza crust for breakfast, usually skip lunch, and when I get home, we either order pizza for dinner, or we attempt to make something in the kitchen.

In general, the three of us try to cook about once a week. The rest of the week, we order pizza. I like to think of myself as being a teenage mutant ninja turtle.

Yesterday, we attempted to make sausages, chicken fingers, pasta, pasta sauce and a baguette. We took the sausages and threw them in a pan. Peter, one of my roommates, started to take charge. "You have to defrost them first. Put these in the microwave and defrost them," he said to me.

"All right, no problem."

I took the sausages and put them in the microwave and hit the defrost button. We waited about forty five seconds. I took the sausages out. "Defrost sucks, man. They are not even warm after forty five seconds. I'm throwing them in on high." One minute later, the sausages were practically cooked.

Peter threw them in a pan that contained water and Crisco oil. I asked Peter why he added water to it; he told me that it was just what you are supposed to do. He acted like he wanted to fight me about it, so I let it go. He put the stove on high, threw the sausages in the pan and put a lid on top. I then took the baguette and threw it in the oven along with the chicken fingers and turned it to 450 degrees. The pasta sat on a burner, on high, where we put in the pasta before the water was boiling. I put the Ragu sauce in another pan and put that on the stove.

We stood there waiting, hungry, wondering what to do. I hate how you have to wait when you are cooking. Peter then started to shake around the sausage pan, which was starting to get really loud and hot. I left the kitchen and started to eat a pizza crust I found on the floor, and watched television. All of the burners were on high. Peter sat down next to me with the remote. We watched a comedian on Comedy Central.

I'm sure you can guess what happened next. "Do you smell that?"

"Yeah, I think something is burning."

"Oh, my God, dude, the food!"

We ran back into the kitchen. We pulled the food out of the oven. The bread was completely black. The chicken was burnt, but still edible. The sausages were burnt, but only on one side.

The kitchen had oil all over the place, and Ragu sauce had popped out of the pan and gotten all over the kitchen. There were red dots everywhere. For some reason, Peter thought cooking the Ragu sauce on high made sense. The pasta pot, which had on a lid, had foam coming out the top. All of the pans had burned. It would take hours to scrub them clean. The sausage pan was the worst.

We did our best to salvage all of the food, but it was to no avail. Peter and I started eating the chicken fingers and finished them. We threw out the baguette. We poured the burned sauce into the over-cooked pasta, cut up the sausages, which were bright red inside and burnt black on the outside, put those in the pasta and mixed it all up. I looked over to Peter. Rick, our other roommate, was in his bedroom.

"Rick, dinner is ready!" Pete said.

"Since we cooked, you have to clean up!"

Rick came scrambling in.

Take Heart

Yesterday, my four year old nephew, Christopher, asked me, "Why did Poppy die?"

"I don't know," I fumbled as my mind tried to find words to gently explain the heart attack that took his grandfather.

Christopher was quiet for a minute before offering his own explanation, "One of our teachers was away for a week...." he paused, "Her husband died."

His twin sister, Sara, chimed in, "His heart broke. He drove too much. He was always in his car."

Out of the mouths of babes.

This Valentine's Day, take heart and make a vow to get and stay in shape. There is no better way to say, "I love you" than ensuring you are healthy and will be around to see your family grow.

In its 2004 Update, The American Heart Association estimates that 700,000 Americans will have a coronary attack this year. The report ranks Cardiovascular Disease as the number one killer in the United States, beating out cancer and HIV, with New Yorkers having the highest death rate.

This is not "a man's disease," it is the number one cause of death in American women. Not a statistic to be proud of, particularly since so much can be done to prevent it.

You've heard it before, but I will write it anyway: the three risk factors are high blood cholesterol, high blood pressure and being overweight. Eating right and exercise can help ward off a heart attack as well as a stroke, which is the number three cause of death in America. For more information on how you can fight heart disease, visit the American Heart Association's site at www.americanheart.org.

Now, as promised, here is my progress as a participant in the Gurney's Fitness and Nutrition Challenge. I am working with head fitness director Candice Monte on a six week "get fit" bet. This is Week Three and I confess that I was clueless as to the amount of "flabola" I was hiding behind elastic waistbands and under oversized sweat-shirts. I honestly believed that walking the dog down a flight of stairs constituted exercise. Wrong-O.

Candice has shown me the light and now I am an advocate. I began this bet thinking the benefits would be all cosmetic... like dropping a dress size or two or three. But, already I have realized so much more. I have energy and increased stamina as witnessed by my fellow enlistees in the infamous "boot camp" class.

Today, Candice had me strap on a heart rate monitor as we did intervals. I focused on the chest, arms and upper back using both free weights and machines. Rather than rest between sets, Candice had me leap on a treadmill and run for three minutes, keeping in my upper target zone.

The heart rate monitor made me feel cool. Like I knew what I was doing. Though Candice interrupted me to ask why I wasn't breathing. Who can breathe while they are running and watching a heart monitor? Who can breathe while doing crunches? I intake when I should out-take. I want to say that breathing is natural. Like walking. Both of which I don't seem to do correctly, but I am learning. (And, the heart rate monitor looks chic even if I am not.)

If you are wondering about a dazzling gift to give your loved one, may I suggest a little "blip blip" (as in a heart rate monitor)? These devices are easy to use and tell when you are in your optimum heart strengthening and fat burning zones. They cost anywhere from $50-100 and are well worth the investment. Plus, they look spiffy.

It is still not too late for you and your Valentine to join Gurney's Fitness and Nutrition Challenge. Candice's team is devoted to getting you healthy and in shape by offering a host of stress-reducing yoga classes, weight training and cardio and toning classes. Every month there is a weigh-in and body fat test to see how you are faring.

So give the love of your life your healthy heart. Eat right, exercise and join me in knocking out America's number one killer: Cardiovascular Disease.

The Garden At Rock Cottage by Lance Brilliantine

Rhododendron, King of Shrubs

There is no more rewarding shrub than rhododendron. This regal plant graces homes of rich and poor alike with its beautiful blooms and elegant appearance. The shrub is regarded by many as the best flowering evergreen for temperate landscapes.

It is not too early to plan rhododendrons for spring – the best time to plant this shrub. It is an excellent plant for East End gardens since the plant is acid loving, has shallow roots, requires little maintenance, and is even deer proof.

Rhododendrons are of the genus 'Rhododendron' which is in the heath family (Ericaceae), and includes heathers, mountain laurels, blueberries, and cranberries. Rhododendrons can be found in the wild, mostly in mountainous areas of the arctic and northern temperate zones. Plant collectors have gathered rhododendron species for more than a century from all over the world.

Cultivated rhododendrons are mostly hybrids that are propagated from cuttings or tissue cultures. The shrubs have large, shiny, leathery, evergreen leaves, and clusters of large flowers that are pink, white, rose or purple. Newer hybrids include colors such as peach, mottled yellow, and orange. Flowers appear mostly in the spring though some species may bloom late into July.

Rhododendrons grow best in filtered or partial sunlight. Soil around the shallow roots of the shrub must be kept cool and moist, but well drained. As such, they are not suitable for beachfront properties where they receive full sunlight and the sandy soil heats. Full sunlight bleaches the flowers, burns the leaves, and dehydrates the shrub.

Rhododendrons look best when planted in groups of three or more. Single plants don't make an adequate statement. Because they are best as large groupings, they work well at the fronts of properties, along garden paths, and to punctuate landscape design. Plan to plant the shrubs where they will receive some protection from wind. This helps avoid leaf scorch and splitting of the stem bark. Ideally, select a site that slopes north or east and receives some protection from drying south and west winds.

To plant a rhododendron, use soil that is mulched with organic material. Garden loam mixed with equal parts of coarse sand and ground bark or oak leaves is a good combination. You can ensure adequate drainage by first digging a hole about 18 inches deep and pouring in a bucket of water. If the water is still standing after a half-hour, you need to dig deeper and add broken crockery, sand, or rocks to improve drainage.

Contrary to what most nurseries say, it is important to remove the burlap from around the roots before planting. Be careful not to disturb the fragile roots. Place loose soil at the bottom of the hole, and position the plant so the soil line of the plant is level with the surrounding soil. Fill the hole with soil mixture and water heavily. Keep the plant well watered for the first growing season.

Do not fertilize at the time of planting, as this might injure the roots. Supplemental feeding is not normally needed if you use a year-round mulch of rotted oak leaves. This will provide natural nutrients and will help keep the soil cool and moist. If needed, apply a fertilizer for acid-loving plants around the plant's base in early spring.

Reputable nurseries on the East End carry rhododendrons during spring. Marder's, Country Gardens (Agway), East Hampton Gardens, and Wittendale's all sell standard and unusual varieties. Select plants that have full leaves. Do not select plants that have yellowed leaves, seem withered, or where the root ball has dried out. Look for multiple branches low on the root ball when selecting a plant.

Prune rhododendrons only after the flowers have faded to induce new growth. Prune out dead, diseased or damaged branches, and cut old branches back to the soil level to encourage new growth. Light-to-moderate pruning done immediately after flowering will not affect flower-bud formation for the following year.

After flowering, dead-head spent flowers to make the bush look more attractive and to prevent a heavy set of seeds. Dead-heading increases the number of flowers the following season.

Because of their popularity, rhododendrons are priced within reach of every gardener. We believe a good garden plan includes at least a few plants.

messages of Jackson and Timberlake, the red bra that supposedly "malfunctioned," and probably the breast itself. Is it even a real breast? Some say it is a surgically enhanced breast. And what of the piece of jewelry covering the center of the breast which people say is attached to a body piercing hook that goes through, oh, it sounds so awful. I suppose there will be a lot of reviewing of the videotape, in slow motion, in fast motion, in any other kind of motion.

On the same day that all of this hoopla occurred, the day after Superbowl Sunday, President Bush announced his next annual budget. It is $2.4 trillion. Military spending is up. Homeland Security is up. But the budget for everything else is down. There will be less money spent in total than in the current year. We all have to tighten our belts.

Also on that day, President Bush announced that he will create an independent Congressional commission to learn why the intelligence given to him about Iraq and Weapons of Mass Destruction has not turned out to match what we have found on the ground there. In other words, what did they know and when did they know it?

It should be noted that there are already seven other investigations going on about this, from the CIA to the FBI to many other organizations spelled out by three capital letters. But President Bush promises that the one by his Independent Commission will be the daddy of all investigations, on the scale of the Warren Commission that investigated the death of JFK all those years ago.

I would like to suggest that, in the interests of belt tightening, this Presidential commission — incidentally Bush said he slept through halftime — conduct investigations of both the Jackson affair and the Iraq affair, thus combining the work of commissions created by at least eleven different three letter organizations. It is said by those in the know that the Iraq Commission will not be revealing its results until after the Presidential election in November, for obvious political reasons. Because they will have to drag their feet in order to make their investigation last so long, they will have plenty of time to fill in the gaps with the Jackson investigation. One day, a review of a memo from the CIA to the President about plutonium rods, the next day, an examination of Janet Jackson's left breast to see if it matches the right. If nothing else, it will keep these congressional investigators on their toes.

And nobody should forget that no matter what the facts might be, it is a perjury punishable by a jail sentence to lie to a Congressional committee. Just ask Martha Stewart.

Letters

PROSE PRAISE

Dear Dan,

Recently, I have received a letter from Senator Kerry in which he praises my novel Moses Returns: The Last Revolution (I sent you a letter about the novel on January 6, 2004 along with a copy of it.) The Senator wrote, "...The questions raised in this book are timeless...Consideration of such issues is essential to the success of American political discourse."

These words make me especially happy and confirm my hope for potential success of my novel.

MEMORIES

Dear Dan,

Grandma always spoke so fondly of you, and her time at Dan's Papers. I know a mention in your paper would mean the world to her. Thank you. The following is biographical information on Grandma.

Jane Gleason, though born in New Jersey has been a life long New Yorker. During her 100 years she did spend a few years in California (when her husband Edward who was a newspaper reporter briefly went looking for work) otherwise she has lived in Queens, New York, Huntington and Southampton, where she has resided for the past forty plus years.

Jane's parents died when she was young. She was raised by her three maiden aunts who were dancers in New York City show business. Jane has worked hard her whole life. She began when high school age to work at Macy's Herald Square, New York City in the sweater department, and then she became a legal secretary for Investment Company Institute.

Jane married Edward Gleason and they enjoyed raising two children Donald and Joan. Donald served in WWII and is now a retired psychiatrist (GI Bill education) in California. Joan attended Cornell University, married, had four children. She divorced and now also lives in California. Jane has seven grandchildren all living in California, save one, Katherine, who is a dedicated fellow New Yorker. Three of the seven grandchildren; Michel, Diane and April are regular New York visitors.

Jane retired sometime ago and even while retired worked part time at Dan's Papers in the Hamptons. Jane was an active woman, playing canasta and bowling with friends and she always loved gardening. She did all her own yard work 'til quite recently. Jane stopped driving five years ago.

She also always has been a sports enthusiast. During the Knicks games (her favorite team) she will not answer the phone.

Jane is sharp as a tack. She claims she is losing some short-term memory — though none of her children or grandchildren can spot it. Jane continues to be independent, living in her own home with a live in attendant Sadie, and enjoying the Knicks and walks in her quiet neighborhood. Jane loves New York and has always been proud to be a New Yorker. She is a devoted and interested mom and grandma.

Katherine Terrill
New York City

Jane resides in my long-term memory. -D.R.

LIKE FATHER LIKE SON

Dear Dan,

Thanks for providing me with such a great paper to read. I log in each week from my home in Aberdeenshire, Scotland just to enjoy the articles. I'm glad everyone survived this week's dip in the harbor - what a story! David's report on Poop in his Away at School column had me nearly falling off my seat with laughter. He has clearly inherited/picked up the same ability as yourself to tell a great story.

Take care and keep up the great work.

Colin S.K. Walker

Many thanks. -D.R.

PAY PROTEST

Dear Dan,

During the past seventy-seven years I have stayed at some pretty expensive places, but Southampton Hospital tops them all. I recently received a summary notice from my insurer showing they paid the hospital $6.05 less than $10,000 for my recent five-day semi-private stay.

With all due respect to this fine institution, how did we get to this point of $2,000 a day per bed?

Now, we are told that the debt service on the loans will further cripple the administration.

What are we going to do? I believe I know the only answer.

There are a few of our summer neighbors who could write a check for $50 million and not blink an eye. We must get these billionaires to help bail Southampton Hospital out, now, before we have to close it.

Can you picture that? I can't.

Nat Gribin
Bridgehampton

It is not possible to imagine a boarded up Southampton Hospital. -D.R.

BILINGUAL BEASTS

Dear Dan,

I'm mailing from Rome in Italy and my name is Serena Lombardi, I'm a student of the SSIT (www.ssit.it) of Rome and for my graduation thesis I have to translate an English or an American book towards Italian. I chose the book "The Green Monkeys" as I have great interest in comics, but I need your permission.

Do you know if this book has already been translated into Italian?

Obviously, my translation won't be published. It will be used only for academic purpose.

Please answer me as soon as possible as without the permission I can't translate it. Take care.

Waiting for your kind reply.

DATE DEBATE

Dear Dan,

In your January 30th issue, you mention that there will be a re-make of The Producers, the original of which was directed by Mel Brooks, "in 1968." Is this a typo?

I saw that film with my boyfriend. We broke up in 1976, so that film must have been made before then.

Maddy

Need a mortgage, but feeling like your lender is dragging you along?

At The New York Mortgage Company, we deliver personalized service with one person in mind . . . You.

These days, it seems that getting responsive service from most mortgage lenders is a thing of the past.

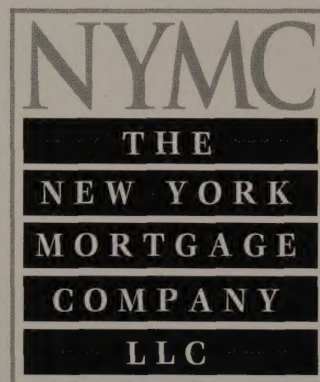

As a direct lender, NYMC minimizes the delays that are often associated with borrowing from a large bank, making sure that the processing of your loan never drags – so you can get the approval you want, super fast.

We also offer the best rates around. Plus, a wide range of loan products to choose from, including Interest Only Loans, Jumbo Loans, Refinance Loans, Bridge Loans, FHA/VA Loans, True No Doc Loans and many others.

Ask about our LIBOR Interest Only loan at 2.25% rate, 2.42% APR

ARM APRs may increase after consummation. Offer subject to credit approval.
Advertised rates are prevailing and are subject to change without notice.

Contact NYMC today, and see why when it comes to your mortgage, we take things personally.
